13. Using deadly weapon in dacotcy or robbery.—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 397.—A conviction, under s. 397 of the Penal Code, of using a deadly weapon whilst engaged in the commission of robbery or dacotcy, is equally good, whether the number of thieves be five or under. (QUEEN v. DWARKA AHIR.)

14. Commission of grievous hurt in the course of a dacotcy.—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 397, 31.—Person liable under s. 31, liable also under s. 397.—Held that the words "such offender" in s. 397 of the Indian Penal Code include any person taking part in the dacotcy who, though he may not himself have struck the blow causing the grievous hurt, is nevertheless liable for the act by reason of s. 31 of the Code. (QUEEN-KARRISS v. MANABIR TIWARI.)

8. Gang of dacotys.—Penal Code, s. 400.—It is necessary, in order to establish a charge under s. 400, Penal Code, that the prosecution should make out that there existed at the time specified a gang of persons associated together for the purpose of habitually committing dacotcy, and that the accused was one of the gang. (QUEEN v. MOORTARAJ SINDAR.)

9. Habitual commission of dacotcy and robbery.—Penal Code, s. 400.—To support a conviction under s. 400 of the Penal Code, evidence must be given of the existence of a gang of persons, of their association, and association for the purpose of habitually committing dacotcy and robbery. (I. C. W. N., 146)

See MANAKTA PAST v. QUEEN-KARRISS
I. L. R., 27 Cal., 139
10. Forcible removal of cows by Hindus from the possession of Mahomedans.—Penal Code, s. 395.—Kinging—Where a large body of Hindus, acting in concert and apparently under the influence of religious feeling, attacked certain Mahomedans who were driving cattle along a public road and forcibly deprived them of the possession of such cattle under circumstances which did not indicate any intention of subsequently restoring such cattle to their lawful owners.—Held that the offence of which the Hindus were guilty was dacotcy under s. 395 of the Indian Penal Code, and not merely riot. (QUEEN-KARRISS v. RAKH BAKAR.)

11. Dacotcy with murder.—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 395 and 396.—Facts necessary to constitute the offence.—In order to support a conviction under s. 396 of the Penal Code, it is necessary to establish, not only that the person accused under that section was committing dacotcy conjointly with others, but it must be shown that the murder was committed in his presence. Hence where certain persons were shown to have been concerned in a dacotcy in the course of which murder was committed, but it was not shown that they were in the house in which the dacotcy was committed at the time the murder took place, and the evidence, if anything, pointed to a contrary conclusion, it was held that the accused could not properly be convicted under s. 396, but only under s. 395, of the Penal Code. 12. Dacotcy in the course of which murder is committed.—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 396.—Facts necessary to establish the offence.—When in the commission of a dacotcy murder is committed, it matters not whether the particular dacotcy charged under s. 396 of Act XLV of 1860 was inside the house where the dacotcy is committed or outside the house, or whether the murder was committed inside or outside the house, so long only as the murder was committed in the commission of that dacotcy. DACOITY—continued.

8. ——— Gang of dacoits—Penal Code, s. 400.—It is necessary, in order to establish a charge under s. 400, Penal Code, that the prosecution should make out that there existed at the time specified a gang of persons associated together for the purpose of habitually committing dacoity, and that the accused was one of the gang. QUEEN v. MOOKTARAM SIRDAR . . . 23 W. R., Cr., 18

9. ——— Habitual commission of dacoity and robbery—Penal Code, s. 400.—To support a conviction under s. 400 of the Penal Code, evidence must be given of the existence of a gang of persons, of their association, and association for the purpose of habitually committing dacoity and robbery. 1 SUITS FOR DAMAGES*(a) BREACH OF CONTRACT.

1. — Breach of contract to put lessee in possession—A suit will lie for damages sustained by a lessee by his lessor's breach of contract to put him in possession of a portion of the property of which he granted the lease PIRENGER SINGH v. AHMED HOSSEIN . . . 7 W R, 22

2. — Liability to repay consideration-money—Cause of action—Defendants for a consideration granted to plaintiffs a lease of certain churs, which were an accretion to a zamindari, and had been in possession of Government, but were at the time under temporary settlement with the defendants. Subsequently defendants sold their zamindari to a third party, reserving to themselves the chur. Ultimately it was ordered by the Commissioner of Revenue that the churs should be settled, not with defendants but with the purchasers (the third party) . . . 15 W R, 228

Interest put an end to any claim for damages for the original breach of contract and constituted a fresh cause of action from which limitation ran BROJO NATH PAUL CHOWDHURY v. BIKOLA SOODHUREE DOSSIA . . . 15 W R, 228

6. — Breach of contract in completing purchase—Earnest-money Right to recover—D contracted to sell to P a piece of land for Rs 500 of which he received Rs 700 as earnest money. A contract was drawn up by which D agreed to execute and register a bill of sale and deposit a part (Rs 800) of the price and P was to execute a bond for Rs 2000 to bear interest conditioned for the payment of that sum by a fixed date the transaction to be completed within a specified period. D was ready and willing to perform his part of the contract by the time named but finding that P would not complete the purchase, but demanded back the earnest money, he sold the property to a third party for Rs 800. P then sued to recover the earnest money

7. — Contract for sale of immovable property—Breach of such contract—Damages—Costs of suit—Title to be made by vendor.—On the 8th October 1881, the defendant, who was executrix of one M, contracted to sell to the plaintiff a house in Bombay for Rs 301, the contract to be completed within two months. The plaintiff paid R500 as earnest-money at the date of the contract, and the remainder of the purchase-money was to be paid on the execution of the conveyance. In October, November, and December, the plaintiff's solicitors applied to the defendant for the title-deeds, in order that the conveyance might be prepared; and on the 6th December, the defendant through her solicitors replied that she was ready and willing to execute the conveyance, but could not find the title-deeds. The plaintiff's solicitors then requested to be furnished with an abstract of title, or a statement of the defendant's title to the house, and then they would consider what could be done. No reply to this letter being received, they wrote again on the 10th December 1884, stating that the time for completing the contract had expired; and giving formal notice that, if the defendant did not send the abstract or statement of title within two days, proceedings would be taken to compel specific performance and to recover damages. In reply to this letter, the defendant's solicitors wrote on the 11th December 1884, stating that the defendant had searched for the title-deeds, but had been unable to find them, but that, as soon as they were found, they would be handed over. In the meantime, they were instructed to state that the property was mortgaged to M (of whose will the defendant was executrix) and one K; that K had agreed to convey the property in question to the defendant; and that the deed of conveyance was being prepared. They further stated that, if the plaintiff wished to accept a conveyance without the old title-deeds, the defendant was willing to indemnify him against all claims to the property; but if he was not prepared to do so, the defendant was willing to pay back the earnest-money to him and to rescind the contract. On the 13th December 1884, the plaintiff's solicitors wrote that they could not advise the plaintiff to take the mere conveyance offered, but if the defendant would deposit the purchase-money in a bank in the joint names of the plaintiff and defendant until the title-deeds were found, the plaintiff would complete the purchase at once. They further stated that the plaintiff declined to rescind the contract, and would hold the defendant responsible for loss and costs incurred by the delay. Further correspondence ensued, and a suit was filed on the 20th February 1885, praying for specific performance and R500 damages, or that the defendant should pay to the plaintiff the sum of R2,500 damages, and refund the R500 earnest-money. It subsequently transpired that the title-deeds were with K, the co-mortgagee, and they were set forth in the defendant's affidavit of documents filed in July 1885. The defendant, after the suit was filed, sold the property to one J, and K, the co-mortgagee, joined in the conveyance to him. Held that the case was governed by Flureau v. Thornhill, 2 W. Bl., 1070, and Bain v. Fothergill, 7 Eng. & Ir., Ap., 268, and that the plaintiff could not recover damages for the loss of his bargain. The defendant had offered to do all that lay in her power to carry out her contract, and the case of Engell v. Fitch, L. R., 4 Q. B., 659, did not apply. PITAMBER SUNDARJI v. CASSIBAI

8. ——— Rights of renter of abkari farm—Madras Abkari Act (Madras Act III of 1864), s. 6—Right of Collector to close shops included in the renter's contract—Collector's orders modified by Board of Revenue.—The plaintiff rented from Government an abkari farm, on terms which reserved certain powers of control to the Collector, and obtained a license under the Abkari Act. He did not manage the shops in the contract area himself, nor obtain separate licenses for their management by others. The Collector made orders which were subsequently modified by the Board of Revenue, directing the closing of certain shops which the plaintiff had sublet and directing that others should not be opened. It was found that the Collector's orders were not in excess of the powers reserved to him under the contract, and that they had not been issued arbitrarily or otherwise than in good faith. B removed his crop, and thereafter sued in a Civil Court for a declaration that he was A's tenant of the land in question holding occupancy rights. A did not defend the suit, and the Civil Court passed a declaratory decree in favour of the plaintiff, and further proceeded to execute that declaratory decree by putting B in possession. Subsequently B sued A for damages in respect of the alleged removal by A of a second crop, which he asserted that he (B) had sown upon the said land. Held that B had no cause of action, and that, even if in fact he had sown the crop in respect of which damages were claimed he did so at his own peril and as a trespasser. UNIT NARAIN SINGH v SHIB RAI . . . . . I. 73. ————— Attachment of property of third person—Liability of execution-creditor for wrongful seizure in execution of decree.—There is not any universal rule that a judgment-creditor is, or that he is not, liable in suit for a wrongful seizure, or for injury to the goods while under seizure. His liability must depend upon the circumstances of the case, i.e., upon the fact whether the wrongful seizure or the injury is the result of his own conduct; for instance, if the judgment-creditor personally, or his authorized agent (ex. gr., his pleader), apply, under s. 214 of the Civil Procedure Code, for the attachment of property which is specially designated in that application, and if the Court grant its warrant for the seizure of that particular property, and the officer of the Court execute the warrant, and the property be not that of the judgment-debtor, the judgment-creditor would certainly be liable for that wrongful seizure, and the officer of the Court could justify under the warrant, and would not be liable so long as he kept within the duty expressly prescribed for him by it. But if the application of the judgment-creditor were for a general attachment under s. 218 of the Code, and the Court took no such security from him as it might take under that section, and if the Court granted a general warrant for the attachment of the moveable property of the judgment-debtor, and the officer of the Court, without any suggestion to that effect from the judgment-creditor or his agent, beyond a general direction to execute the warrant, were to seize property not belonging to the judgment-debtor, the judgment-creditor would not be responsible. Quere—Whether, under such circumstances as those last mentioned, the officer of the Court would be responsible. VANA JAGANNATHJI v. An attachment having been ordered, M and J objected by petition that the property belonged to them, and not to P, upon which V A & Co. applied to have them made co-defendants in the regular suit which had been brought against P, on the ground that they (M and J) and P were partners in trade. The decision in the suit released the property on the ground that there was no such partnership, and that the property belonged exclusively to M and J. M and J then sued V A & Co. to recover damages sustained by their goods under the above attachment and profits foregone during the stoppage of their trade by the tortious acts of the defendants. Held that, as V A & Co. had made the attachment most carelessly and recklessly, and without sufficient or reasonable ground for assuming M and J to be partners of P, they were rightly amerced in damages. Held also that their act, having been one done without a probable cause, was such as to evince a malicious motive on their part, and that damages in such a case should be in the nature of a penalty as well as of a compensation. Held further that plaintiffs were not bound to release their property, and it was no defence to their claim for damages to say that they might have done so by giving security, nor could their declining to do so shift the responsibility of the illegal acts of the defendants. VALABT ALI KHAN v. In a suit for a refund of the deposit money and for damages, Held that the suit was brought, not on the pottah and kabuliati, but on an implied contract by the defendant to do that which was necessary to give effect to his own pottah, viz., to allow it to be registered, and that the real question was whether the plaintiffs had done all that they were required to do to entitle them to the assent of the defendant to registration. As the pottah had been executed and handed over, if it specified no pre-requisite conditions, the natural presumption was that no such conditions existed, although that presumption might be rebutted by sufficient evidence. Damages for a breach of a contract of this kind, though not necessarily the same as for keeping a person out of possession, would yet be the loss occasioned to the plaintiff by the contract not having been performed. Held further that, although the amount the refund of which was sued for was in fact in deposit for the rents of the old lease which had not yet expired, yet, as the defendant had abandoned that lease and entered into a new arrangement damages—Penalty—Measure of damages—Act IX of 1872 (Contract Act), s. 74.—Under s. 74 of the Contract Act, 1872, the Courts are not bound, even in cases where the parties to a contract have, in anticipation of a breach, expressly determined by agreement what shall be the sum payable as damages for the breach, to award such sum for a breach, but may award for the same "reasonable compensation" not exceeding such sum. As a general principle, compensation must be commensurate with the injury sustained. Acting upon this principle, when the injury consists of a breach of contract, the Court would assess damages with a view of restoring to the injured party such advantages as he might reasonably be expected to have derived from the contract had the breach not occurred. Held therefore, where the parties to a contract to deliver a certain quantity of raw indigo on a certain day agreed that a certain sum should be paid as compensation in case such indigo was not delivered as agreed, that the method of assessing damages in case of a breach of the contract would be to ascertain the quantity of indigo which could have been pressed out of the stipulated amount of indigo plant, to ascertain the price at which the indigo might have been fairly sold in the market during the season to which the contract related, and to deduct from such price the ordinary charges of producing and selling the quantity of indigo in question, and that more than the amount so ascertained ought

From the evidence it appeared that the loan was to have been advanced on the 1st March 1887, and that the plaintiff's attorneys had prepared necessary deeds, which were ready on that day for execution by the defendant. The plaintiff had on that day withdrawn Rs 20,000 from his bankers, where it had been lying in deposit, bearing interest at 6 per cent per annum, and he himself took it to the attorney's office for payment to the defendant. The defendant, however, did not attend, and on the following day the money was paid in again to the plaintiff's bankers at the same rate of interest as before. The defendant failed to take the loan, and the plaintiff sued him for breach of the agreement. He claimed as damages interest on the Rs 20,000 at 1½ per cent per annum for the three years for which under the agreement the loan was to be made. Held that he was not entitled to interest for three years, but only to interest for such period as might reasonably

163. ——— Action of trespass—Damage to property by alteration of neighbouring house—Injunction.—Plaintiff and defendants, occupants of neighbouring houses, were joint tenants of the party-wall. Defendants unroofed their house, raised the wall, and placed beams on it to rebuild their house. The lower Appellate Court found that, in consequence of this alteration, the rain from defendants' house descended upon plaintiff's verandah and caused damage to plaintiff, and decreed that defendants should restore the wall to its former height, and remove the beams placed on it. Held, on special appeal, that taking the finding to be that the alteration created "stillicidium," where it did not exist before, or that it rendered more burdensome an existent "servitus stillicidii," it would be very dangerous to hold that every trifling excess in the exercise of a servitude should justify the pulling down of the building creating the excess; that in the present case the damages should be assessed and awarded, and the injunction to remove the roof of the house and reduce the wall be made conditional upon the defendants not removing the cause of the nuisance. In such a case, the measure of damages is the amount which will induce the defendants to abate the nuisance. AKILANDANMAL v. VENKATA CHALA MUDALI

165. ——— Infringement of trade mark—Damage caused to plaintiffs by way of enhancement of loss, and not by loss of profit.—Where the infringement of the plaintiffs' trade mark by the defendants caused a loss of profit to the plaintiffs, not by diminishing the amount of goods sold by the plaintiffs, by taking away their customers or ousting them from their usual market, but by causing the goods actually sold by the plaintiffs to be sold at a diminished price.—Held that the defendants were liable for the loss sustained by the plaintiffs; and that the amount of the reduction in the price of the goods sold was the measure of damages. The plaintiffs sued the defendants for the infringement of a trade mark used by the plaintiffs upon bundles of yarn sold by them, and known as "No. 20 red tie" yarn. They alleged that the defendants introduced into the Madras market a quantity of yarn bearing similar marks to those upon the plaintiffs' yarn, but of very inferior quality; and that, in consequence of this act on of the defendants, the selling price of the plaintiff's yarn was, during the months of April and May 1885, depreciated beyond the amount of depreciation attributable to the natural fall of market prices in those months; and they contended that such depreciation was the natural and reasonable result of the defendants' wrongful act. The plaintiffs calculated the damages sustained by them at Rs. 6,000. It appeared that during the months in question the plaintiffs' mill was not working at a profit, and would have made no profits even if the plaintiffs had obtained for their yarn the ruling market price. The damage, therefore (if any), caused to the plaintiffs by the action of the defendants was not in form of profits, but in the form of enhancement of loss, Held, upon the evidence, that the extra fall in the price of the plaintiffs' yarn beyond the general market depression was due, not simply to the introduction of the defendants' yarn into the Madras market, but to its introduction with the trade mark similar to that of the plaintiffs. The Court found that the said wrongful act of the defendants prejudicially affected the sale of the plaintiffs' yarn to the extent of about two annas per bundle; that the damage thus sustained by the plaintiffs was the reasonable and probable result of the defendants' action; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover such damage from the defendants. MANOCKJI PETIT MANUFACTURING COMPANY v. Subsequently the defendant, who retained possession of the decree, sued out execution and realized the amount due under it, together with subsequent interest thereon. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover back the money paid by him in satisfaction for the sale, together with damages proportionate to the loss sustained by reason of the subsequent improper execution of the decree, viz., the amount of subsequent interest. GOOR SAHAI v. 167. ——— Wrongful attachment—Death of cattle seized.—In execution of a decree against his judgment-debtor, the defendant caused the cattle of the plaintiff, a stranger, to be seized and taken. The plaintiff filed his claim under s. 246, Act VIII of 1859, which was allowed. Subsequently to the admission of the claim, but before the order for release of the cattle, three of the bullocks died. The plaintiff sued for damages consequent on the seizure of the cattle, and for the value of the three bullocks which had died during the time they were in the custody of the officer of the Court. Held that the defendant was liable to the plaintiff for damages sustained by him in consequence of the seizure and detention of the cattle,—i.e., for a sum sufficient to cover what would have been plaintiff's expenses for hiring bullocks to cultivate his land. SURJAN BIBI v. 168. Liability of execution-creditor in damages for wrongful seizure—Attachment of stranger's property—Certain unthreshed rice belonging to the plaintiff was wrongfully attached by the defendants under a money-decree obtained by them against a third party. The attachment had been made under a warrant which specified the rice in question, and which had been issued upon a dakhast presented by the defendants, in which they prayed for the attachment of this particular rice as their judgment debtor's property. The rice, while in the custody of a bailiff of the Court nazir in the place where it had been attached, was clandestinely threshed and carried off by thieves, who left the straw. In a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover the value of the unthreshed rice from the defendants,—Held the measure of damages should be the value of the rice as it stood at the time of the wrongful attachment made at the instance of the defendants. If, however, the plaintiff accepted the straw left by the thieves, the value of the straw as it stood at the time of such acceptance should be deducted from the value of the straw and rice when uncovered from each other. GOMA MAHAD PATIL GOKALDAS KHIMJI I. defendant should pay plaintiff Rs 14 000 on account of the timber which had been carried off, by whom it did not appear. On appeal, the High Court confirmed the decision of the District Judge on the question of title, but reversed it as to the value of the timber carried off, because there was no causal connection between its loss and a wrongful act of the defendant which was needed to justify the award of that sum as damages. There was no evidence of the mode of the loss. The occasion for it was given by an order of a Magistrate, and the mere preferring of the complaint which gave birth to that order did not render the defendant responsible in the circumstances of the case. IRVINE v. 174. ——— Suit for trespass—Expenses of criminal proceedings—Loss of income.—The plaintiffs, describing themselves as the agent and gomastah of the hereditary durmakurtah of the Trivellore Pagoda, brought a suit for damages against the defendant, the committee of the district, appointed by virtue of Act XX of 1863, and their servants, for a trespass by the defendants in forcibly dispossessing them of the pagoda and the property therein, and for the wrongful removal and retention of the property. The plaintiff stated that the defendants were punished criminally for the trespass by the Magistrate, who, after enquiry under ss. 318 and 319 of the Criminal Procedure Code, restored the possession of the pagoda to the plaintiffs. The damages claimed were the value of jewels, cash, records, and accounts not restored; the expense incurred by the durmakurtah in the purification of the pagoda; the amount of counsel's and vakil's fees in the criminal proceedings; and the amount of income received by the defendants during their possession during a festival held at the pagoda. Held that the plaintiff was brought by the plaintiff personally, and not on behalf of the plaintiffs by the durmakurtah through his recognized agents; that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover a moderate amount of damages for the wrong done to them in ejecting them from the pagoda; that the expenses incurred in the criminal proceedings instituted by the plaintiffs were not recoverable as damages, such damages not being directly traceable to the wrong and its natural and necessary consequences; that the amount of income received by the defendants during the festival was a loss sustained by the durmakurtah and not by the plaintiff personally; and that the plaintiff had failed to make out the loss of property alleged. *VENKATASA NAIKER v. 178. ——— Charter-party—Unseaworthiness of ship—Expense of renewing bills—Delay—Loss by exchange.—The plaintiffs chartered a ship of the defendant, and by the charter-party it was stipulated that the said ship, being tight, staunch, and strong, should receive from the plaintiffs a full cargo of rice or grain, and being so loaded should therewith proceed to St. Denis, the freight to be paid there on right delivery of cargo. The penalty for non-performance of the charter-party was to be the estimated amount of freight. The plaintiffs began to load on May 3rd, and continued doing so until June 10th, having then shipped very nearly the full cargo; they then stopped loading in consequence of a notice from the defendant that the ship was leaking. In consequence of the leakage, the cargo had to be shifted, and a portion of it found to be damaged had to be replaced after the leak was stopped. The charges of shifting the cargo and the cost of the cargo substituted were paid by the defendant. Considerable delay occurred in consequence of the leak, and the loading was not completed until the end of July. On May 28th, when the plaintiffs had loaded a portion of the cargo and had obtained bills of lading, they drew a bill of exchange at sixty days for the value of the cargo covered by the bills of lading on their agent at St. Denis, which they sold to the Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris, hypothecating the cargo for the amount of their draft. Other similar drafts were subsequently drawn and sold. When the plaintiffs received notice of the leakage, they, in anticipation of the delay which would occur in consequence, arranged with the Comptoir d'Escompte that the bills should not be forwarded forthwith, but should be held by the Comptoir d'Escompte and renewed by the plaintiffs on the completion of the loading, the plaintiffs paying interest on the bills in the meantime at 9 per cent per annum. On renewing the bills, the plaintiffs in consequence of the difference in the rate of exchange, were out of pocket Rs10. In an action against the owner for breach of the charter party in not supplying a ship tight, staunch, and strong, as stipulated the plaintiffs sought to recover, as damages arising out of such breach of the charter-party, the interest paid by them on the drafts in pursuance of their arrangement with the Comptoir d'Escompte, the sum they had to pay on renewing the bills = further sum for interest on bills they could not negotiate in consequence of not being able to obtain bills of lading from the defendant, and the value of the stamps on the bills which had been cancelled in pursuance of the plaintiffs' arrangement with the Comptoir d'Escompte. Held that such damages were too remote. ROBERT AND CHARRIOL v ISAAC. 6 B L R, Ap, 20

1. ——— Gift by judgment-debtor.—

If a judgment-debtor has sufficient other property to satisfy a decree against him, it cannot be said that, in point of law, every gift of any part of his property is void on the ground that the whole was hypothecated for the payment of the decree. KRIPANATH SURMA v. NRITOKALEE DABEE . . . 12 W. R., 137

2. ——— Voluntary gift by

husband to wife.—A voluntary gift by a husband to his wife is not void against the husband's creditors if at the time of the gift the husband was solvent, and the wife was put in possession under the gift, especially if the plaintiff became a creditor of the husband long after the gift. ENAEET ALI v. RAMPREAH KOONWAR . . . 1 W. R., 21

3. ——— Conveyance by hus*band to wife in fraud of creditors.*—Voluntary deed.—If a man largely indebted executes a conveyance of property to his wife, as in satisfaction of dower, the conveyance is void as against his creditors, if executed for the fraudulent purpose of keeping the property in his own hands out of the reach of the creditors. So also a conveyance by a man in such circumstances to his wife is fraudulent and void if no dower is due, and the conveyance is voluntary, and not made in satisfaction of any debt due to him. MAHOMED BUSSEEROOLAH CHOWDHRY v. ABEMOONISSA . . . 7 W. R., 513

4. ——— Voluntary trans*fer.—Bona fide gift.—Gift not to defraud creditors.*—A voluntary transfer of property by way of gift if made bona fide, and not with the intention of defrauding creditors, is valid as against creditors. The Hindu and English law on the subject discussed. GANUBHAI v. SRINIVASA PILLAI . . . 4 Mad., 84

5. ——— Transfer of property by judg*ment-debtor.*—It is not illegal for a judgment-debtor to dispose of all his property before attachment, provided the transaction is an actual conveyance and not merely nominal. DIGUMBUREE DASSEE v. BANCY MADHUB GHOSE . . . 15 W. R., 155 suit against vendors for debt.—Sale to prevent land being taken in execution.—A sale made of immoveable property pending a suit against the vendors to recover a debt is valid, although the motive of the vendors may have been to prevent the land being attached and sold in execution. PULLEN CHETTY v. RAMALINGA CHETTY . . . 5 Mad., 368

7. ——— Fraudulent assign*ment.—Suit by creditor to set aside transfer.*—When a person being in debt transfers his property, with a view to defeat and defraud any of his creditors, any creditor, after he has established his right as a judgment-creditor, may maintain a suit to set aside the alienation, notwithstanding that the transfer was made before he sued for his debt, or that the debt was unsecured. SUJUN KOONWER v. PIRBHOO LALL

[2 Agra, Pt. II, 211]

8. ——— Assignment in

fraud of creditors.—Possession of property sold remaining in vendor.—Where a person purchases for one who is in failing circumstances and has decrees against him in execution, and allows the vendor (being his relative) to remain in possession of the goods sold, as well as the profits thereof, he may perhaps purchase in good faith; but the Courts are not justified in declaring the validity of such a transfer without there being the clearest proof that the purchaser has bought, and paid the consideration, and some sufficient explanation of the apparently suspicious circumstances attending the purchase. KALLAN v. DOULTA . . . 1 Agra, 79

9. ——— Deed, Execution of, by judg*ment-debtor.—Deed executed in fraud of creditors.*—Where a mortgagor executes a deed of sale for the purpose of defrauding and defeating his creditors, it is void against any of the creditors who may obtain a decree against him, although the deed may have been executed before execution was taken out on the decree. RADHA MOHUN DUTT v. BISSESSUR BUNDOPADHAYA . . . 6 W. R., 90

10. ——— Deed executed by judgment-

debtor.—Assignment to defeat creditors.—Consideration.—Validity of transaction for valuable consideration defeating execution.—Plaintiffs sued for certain lands under an agreement executed to their elder brother, S, by defendants in the following terms: "You have this day received a loan of Rs. 1,345-4-4 from D and from me, B, for the purpose of remitting to the Court, in satisfaction of the warrant amount, in the matter of the suit No. 26 of 1835 on the file of the Provincial Court between your father, the late U, appellant, and M, respondent. You have, owing to the encumbrances consequent on a few more suits against you, caused all the property which you own in Vegayammappetta to be attached for the said (warrant) amount, and caused six puttis of land, houses, back-yards, and certain moveable property out of the same, to be knocked down in auction in our names and some other personal property in the names of others; and have therefore proposed to us to execute a karinama (to you) engaging (ourselves) to carry and pay the above-mentioned (Rs. 1,345-4-4) into the Court; to obtain receipts for the amount and certificates in our names for the real property; to allow the tiled house, back-yard having fruit trees and moveable property, to be held by you as hitherto; V and myself, B, to enjoy the produce of the six puttis of land for twenty years from Saruari to Sit-tadhri, on account of the said loan and interest thereon; and to restore the land, together with the certificates (to be) issued by the Court in our names. We have accordingly agreed to your proposal," etc. The Principal Sudder Ameen considered that the agreement was invalid on the ground that it appeared to have been executed with a view to defraud property by a person in insolvent circumstances and known to be so by the donee will be set aside if impeached by creditors except where the transferee has simply pressed a valid claim or made a purchase in good faith The plaintiff G obtained a decree against M on the 30th September 1878 M died in April 1879 leaving A a childless widow, him surviving At his death M was in insolvent circumstances On the 7th June 1879, A conveyed by a deed of sale (exhibit 98) the whole of his property consisting of a house and a garden to the defendants who were his separated brothers in consideration of two time-barred debts due to them by her deceased husband At the same time she executed in their favour a rent note (exhibit 99) by which she agreed to pay them a nominal rent for her occupation of the house but no rent was ever claimed or paid On the same day the defendants passed an agreement in writing (exhibit No 114) to the widow by which they undertook to settle the claims evidence that it did not form any part of the consideration for the sale deed (exhibit 98) In 1881 the plaintiff G, in execution of his decree against M, attached the house conveyed by the sale deed. The attachment was raised at the instance of the defendants who claimed the house under the sale-deed (exhibit 98) Thereupon the plaintiff G brought the present suit to establish his right to attach and sell the house as the property of his judgment debtor M, in execution of his decree The defendants relied upon the deed of sale executed by the widow (exhibit 98) Held that the alleged sale to the defendants (exhibit 98) was not a real transaction supported by good consideration and must be set aside in so far as it interfered with the execution of the plaintiff's decree The transferees were not purchasers for money, or even creditors diligent in pressing an enforceable right They were members of the vendor's family and the consideration they gave consisted of old and barred claims that could not be enforced Payment of such debts by a transfer of the insolvent's whole estate, to the dis- appointment of creditors whose claims were not barred was in itself a fraud Being made to near relatives acquainted with the facts, it would not be regarded as a real and practical transaction. Held also that the character of the transaction was not altered by the agreement (exhibit 114) of the defendants to settle the claims of M's creditors. That agreement was not communicated to the creditors, and it could be suppressed at any moment by the concurrence of the parties to it. If that agreement was independent of the conveyance (exhibit 98) of the property to the defendants, the latter had no consideration to support it, except, merely the moral consideration to pay a barred debt, which could not prevail against the obligation to satisfy a decree about to be executed. If, on the other hand, the agreement (exhibit 114) was connected with the conveyance (exhibit 98), the exclusion of its terms from that document and the secrecy observed about it stamped the transaction with fraud, whether the transfer was real or only fraudulent. There was no honest trust for distribution which could defeat the plaintiff's execution. M might have preferred one creditor to another having an equal right, and the fact that the creditor was his brother did not make such a preference improper. But although M might have preferred one creditor to another, his widow could not do so. She took her husband's estate as an aggregate, assets and debts together. She was in some degree a trustee and at any rate under a legal obligation to pay her deceased husband's debts, and to pay them as far as she could equally. She was not at liberty to deal capriciously with the estate, which she could alienate at all only for special purposes indicated by the law. She ought not, in performing the duty cast upon her, to prefer one valid claim to another, as her husband might have done. This advantage a creditor might have obtained from her husband by his diligence, but on her no pressure could be exercised except through the estate which she was bound, pressure or no pressure, to distribute among the creditors. A purchaser from a Hindu widow must see that she exercised her power of sale strictly, or at least satisfy himself that a sufficient cause for alienation exists. If the defendants told the widow that the claims, in consideration of which she made the conveyance to them, were barred by limitation, then clearly she had joined with them in a scheme for depriving the judgment-creditors of their due. If they did not tell her, they deceived her by their silence when, as near relatives getting an advantage, they were bound, in dealing with an ignorant woman, to put her in possession of all the material facts. cution sold part of the said property. At the sale, the first defendant, by means of false representation, became the purchaser at an inadequate price. In July 1879, A applied to have the sale set aside, on the ground of the fraud of the first defendant, but his application was rejected. In 1884 the plaintiffs by their next friend sued to set aside the sale, contending that at the date of B's decree the property was theirs by virtue of the deed of gift of June 1875, and further that the sale was void by reason of the defendant's fraud. Held, rejecting the plaintiffs' claim, that the plaintiffs could not be allowed to set up their deed of gift as against the proceedings in execution under which the defendant acquired his title as purchaser. That gift was made to them by A when he was in pecuniary difficulties, and included all A's property. It was, therefore, void as against his then existing creditors, of whom B was one. B was, therefore, entitled to sell the property in execution of his decree. HORMUSJI r. COWASJI

18. ————— Sale to creditor for old debt and new advance on debtor's bankruptcy—Intent to delay and defeat creditors—Bona fides of purchaser—Fraudulent preference—Stat. 13 Eliz., c. 5.—On the 27th February 1886, the firm of Ranchhod Jamna, a family firm, was on the point of failing, being heavily indebted. On that day, the managing member of the firm executed four sale-deeds, comprising all the property of the firm, in favour of four different creditors of the firm, of whom the plaintiff was one. The deed executed in favour of the plaintiff was in consideration of a then existing long-standing debt and a fresh advance of ₹3,400 made by him to the firm. The next day the firm stopped payment. The defendant was one of the creditors of the firm, and sought to attach and sell the property conveyed to the plaintiff in execution of a decree which the defendant had obtained against the firm. The plaintiff's objection to the attachment by the defendant having been disallowed, he brought the present suit against the defendant, to establish his right to the property attached under his sale-deed. The defendant contended (inter alia) that the sale to the plaintiff, having been effected in order to delay and defeat the creditors and to give undue preference to the plaintiff, was void. Held on the evidence that the sale to the plaintiff was, on the part of the plaintiff at least, a bona fide sale in consideration of a debt still due, and for payment of which the plaintiff had been pressing, and ₹3,400 in cash; and that there were no circumstances in the case which showed that the plaintiff in entering into it was a party to any scheme to delay the general body of the creditors. That being the case, the sale was not impeachable at the instance of the defendant; although, having regard to the fact of its having been negotiated on the eve of the failure of the firm, it might possibly be regarded as a sale by which the plaintiff obtained an unfair preference, and as such perhaps be impeachable at the suit of the whole body of creditors. *In re Johnson : Goden v.  deed it being understood that all the creditors should refrain from suing the firm until the expiration of a certain period. Notwithstanding this two creditors named in the deed immediately sued for their debts and obtained decrees. Other creditors named in the deed afterwards bringing the present suit to enforce their rights under the mortgage it appeared that the intention and agreement was that the deed should not take effect unless all the creditors came in and were bound by it. prior assignment but in respect to prior assignments stands in no better position than his judgment debtor. An assignment prior to attachment that is good against the judgment debtor is also as a general rule, good against his attaching creditor. Notice to the holder of funds is not necessary to complete as against the assignor an equitable assignment of such funds. In August 1870 R J signed and gave to F S & Co a letter addressed to E L & Co by which he requested them to pay over to F S & Co any surplus proceeds of his consignment of one hundred bales per Aurora after recovery from the underwriters of the amount due under a policy of insurance (which had been effected on the hundred bales) after making certain deductions. This letter was given to F S & Co in consideration of a pre-existing debt. On the 8th of August 1870 F S & Co sent the letter to E L & Co with a request that they should act upon it. The surplus proceeds of the insurance of the one hundred bales reached F L & Co on the 28th of June 1871, and were attached in their hands by a judgment creditor of R J before they were paid over to F S & Co. Held that R J had validly assigned the surplus proceeds of the insurance.

the 7th April 1869 T obtained a money-decree against D, and on the 3rd July, 1869 attached the lands as belonging to D. Held that if the rasmama were a real transaction made for a valuable consideration although entered into with the intention of defeating the execution of the money decree, the title of plaintiff under that rasmama would prevail. A sale or mortgage, if real, though made for the purpose of defeating an intended or probable execution, is valid against the execution creditor. In July 1879, A applied to have the sale set aside, on the ground of the fraud of the first defendant, but his application was rejected. In 1884 the plaintiffs by their next friend sued to set aside the sale, contending that at the date of B's decree the property was theirs by virtue of the deed of gift of June 1875, and further that the sale was void by reason of the defendant's fraud. Held, rejecting the plaintiffs' claim, that the plaintiffs could not be allowed to set up their deed of gift as against the proceedings in execution under which the defendant acquired his title as purchaser. That gift was made to them by A when he was in pecuniary difficulties, and included all A's property. It was, therefore, void as against his then existing creditors, of whom B was one. B was, therefore, entitled to sell the property in execution of his decree. HORMUSJI v. COWASJI

18. ————— Sale to creditor for old debt and new advance on debtor's bankruptcy—Intent to delay and defeat creditors—Bona fides of purchaser—Fraudulent preference—Stat. 13 Eliz., c. 5.—On the 27th February 1886, the firm of Ranchhod Jamna, a family firm, was on the point of failing, being heavily indebted. On that day, the managing member of the firm executed four sale-deeds, comprising all the property of the firm, in favour of four different creditors of the firm, of whom the plaintiff was one. The deed executed in favour of the plaintiff was in consideration of a then existing long-standing debt and a fresh advance of Rs. 400 made by him to the firm. The next day the firm stopped payment. The defendant was one of the creditors of the firm, and sought to attach and sell the property conveyed to the plaintiff in execution of a decree which the defendant had obtained against the firm. The plaintiff's objection to the attachment by the defendant having been disallowed, he brought the present suit against the defendant, to establish his right to the property attached under his sale-deed. The defendant contended (inter alia) that the sale to the plaintiff, having been effected in order to delay and defeat the creditors and to give undue preference to the plaintiff, was void. Held on the evidence that the sale to the plaintiff was, on the part of the plaintiff at least, a bona fide sale in consideration of a debt still due, and for payment of which the plaintiff had been pressing, and Rs. 400 in cash; and that there were no circumstances in the case which showed that the plaintiff in entering into it was a party to any scheme to delay the general body of the creditors. That being the case, the sale was not impeachable at the instance of the defendant; although, having regard to the fact of its having been negotiated on the eve of the failure of the firm, it might possibly be regarded as a sale by which the plaintiff obtained an unfair preference, and as such perhaps be impeachable at the suit of the whole body of creditors. *In re Johnson : Goden v. prior assignment, but in respect to prior assignments stands in no better position than his judgment-debtor. An assignment prior to attachment that is good against the judgment debtor is also, as a general rule, good against his attaching creditor. Notice to the holder of funds is not necessary to complete, as against the assignor, an equitable assignment of such funds. In August 1870 R J signed and gave to F S & Co a letter addressed to E L & Co., by which he "requested them to pay over to F S & Co any surplus proceeds of his consignment of one hundred bales per Aurora, after recovery from the underwriters of the amount due under a policy of insurance" (which had been effected on the hundred bales), after making certain deductions. This letter was given to F S & Co in consideration of a pre-existing debt. On the 8th of August 1870, F S & Co sent the letter to E L & Co with a request that they should act upon it. The surplus proceeds of the insurance of the one hundred bales reached F L & Co on the 26th of June 1871, and were attached in their hands by a judgment-creditor of R J before they were paid over to F S & Co. Held that R J had validly assigned the surplus proceeds of the hundred bales to F S & Co and that such assignment was valid as against subsequent attaching creditors. Semle—That an attachment upon such surplus proceeds before they reached the hands of E L & Co from the underwriters, would have been invalid. MEGHI HANESAJ v. or bankruptcy is involved, is not void. If a man owes another a real debt, and in satisfaction thereof sells to his creditor an equivalent portion of his property, transferring it to the vendee, and thereby extinguishing the debt, the transaction cannot be assailed, though the effect of it is to give the selected creditor a preference. Wood v. Davis, 7 Q. B. 822; Chowne v. Bagley, 31 L. J. Cl., 757, and the authorities collected in the notes to Tyng v. Carr, 1 Smith's L. C. 12, referred to. Pending a suit for recovery of a debt, the defendant, who was a Mahomedan, executed a deed of sale, dated in June 1882, of a four-annas ramin-dari share in favour of his wife, the consideration recited therein being the amount of the vendor's deferred dower-debt. Subsequently the creditor obtained a simple money-decree against the defendant, and in execution thereof attached the four-annas share. The vendor objected to the attachment on the basis of her sale-deed, but her objection was disallowed on the ground that the instrument was collusive. She there-upon brought a suit against the judgment-creditor for a declaration of her right, and to set aside the attachment order. Held that, if there was in fact a subsisting debt due for dower from the husband to the wife, and he transferred and she accepted the four-annas share in satisfaction of it, the transaction was a perfectly legitimate one, and no Court had any power to disturb it. It was for the defendant, the judgment-creditor, to establish either that the deferred dower-debt did not constitute such a present consideration as would support the sale, or that the transaction was merely colourable and a fictitious one, which was never intended to have operation or effect, either as a transfer of the property or an extinguishment of the dower-debt; and that, despite what appeared in the sale-deed, the parties remained in precisely the same position as before it was executed,—the four-annas still remaining the property of the vendor, and as such liable to the attachment. Held, applying the general principles of the Mahomedan law as to deferred debts, that there was good consideration for the sale of June 1882, and that, in the absence of proof of fraud of the kind above indicated, the vendee was entitled to maintain it, and to succeed in the suit. SUBA BIDI v. trusts in favour of such of his creditors as should assent to the said deeds within three calendar months. The deeds contained powers directing the trustees, after dividing the trust-moneys rateably among the assenting creditors, to pay "the residue, if any, after answering the several purposes aforesaid and also the debts or dividends upon the debts of all such creditors as shall decline to come in and execute or assent" to the said P's powers authorizing them to return to the debtor or permit him to retain such part of his house hold furniture, linen, and china as they might think fit; and powers authorizing them to carry on the debtor's business and employ him therein and in winding up his affairs. Held in the lower Court (TENNYN, J.) that an insolvent debtor in the mofussil may assign all his property to trustees for the benefit of the creditors who may assent to the conditions of the assignment; and such an assignment will be valid, although it may operate to defeat an expected execution, if it be the intention of the assignor to confer on the assenting creditors a substantial interest in the property assigned, and not merely to defeat or hinder a judgment-creditor. Such an assignment may be made to trustees, but it is not requisite that it should be made to trustees; and it is not requisite that it should be made directly to the assenting creditors. It will confer on the trustees a title to the property assigned superior to that of a judgment-creditor, who has obtained an order for attachment subsequently to the assignment. It is not invalid if made subject to a condition requiring assenting creditors to execute a release of the debtor, nor is it invalid if it declares a resulting trust in favour of the debtor; but semble—that the Court might order such resulting trust to be executed for the benefit of judgment-creditors who decline to assent to the assignment. Nor is it invalid if it empowers the trustees to permit the debtor to retain such portion of his furniture, linen, etc., as they may think fit; but this power should be exercised so that the other assets are insufficient to discharge the many objects of the trust. Nor is it invalid if it gives a power for the trustees to continue the business, if the power so given is ancillary to winding up the business and realizing the assets of the estate; nor is it invalid if executed only by a minority of the creditors. Nor can it be invalidated by subsequent negligence on the part of trustees. The question as to the intent on of the debtor in executing such an assignment is a question of fact rather than of law; and in determining this question the conditions and trust subject to which the assignment is made may be considered. Held on appeal (per ROBERTS and PEARSON, JJ., MORGAN, C.J., dissenting) that the deeds were good deeds. A trader in the mofussil in failing circumstances may, in the absence of any statutory provision and of a bankrupt law, make a valid assignment of his property, before liens have attached upon it, or afterwards subject to such liens, to trustees simply for the purpose of having it distributed fairly among all his creditors, although it may defeat particular decree-holders and deprive them of their execution. Semble—Such a trust does not become inoperative by reason of the retirement of two out of three trustees and of the inability

This order was afterwards reversed as having been made without jurisdiction, but was standing when the bond in suit was executed by the decree-holders, now defendants, admitting money to be due to the plaintiff, and, as to a particular sum, promising payment out of the mesne profits when realized by them. The decree-holders, afterwards compromising with their judgment-debtor, abandoned the claim to mesne profits. This, however, was no real concession, because the right to mesne profits had no existence. Although the unqualified admission of a debt implies a promise to pay it, yet this implication does not necessarily follow where there is an express promise to pay in a particular manner, and on a certain event happening. Held, on the construction of the bond, that here the admission was referable to the particular obligation agreed to be discharged only in the manner stipulated; and that therefore the payment was to be contingent on there being mesne profits. Held also that it had not been established that the non-occurrence of the condition had been occasioned by the conduct or default of the defendants, and that, therefore, the objection to pay the sum in question never took effect or became enforceable. KALKA SINGH v. The latter brought a suit in 1885 upon the hypothecation-bond and obtained a personal decree against the present plaintiff, which was ex-parte, the amount of the decree being declared to be charged on the land in the possession of defendants Nos. 2 to 4. Meanwhile, defendant No. 1, who was the assignee of the mortgage of 1882, had obtained a decree upon it against defendant No. 4. This decree not having been executed, he subsequently sued upon the mortgage again and obtained a decree against defendants Nos. 2 to 4. The plaintiff now sued to have the last-mentioned decree set aside and recover the balance of the purchase-money from defendants Nos. 2 to 4. The Court of first instance passed a decree for the amount claimed, and declared it to be charged on the land. Defendant No. 1 preferred an appeal, in which defendants Nos. 2 to 4 were joined by the Court of first appeal, which dismissed the suit. Held that plaintiff, having allowed a decree to be passed against him ex-parte in the suit of the holder of the hypothecation-bond, and having obtained a collusive discharge from the other partner, was not entitled to recover against the defendants. KANAGAPPA r. At the date of the deed, N was largely indebted, and two or three months prior to the date of the deed he had deposited the bulk of his moveable property with a friend, who endeavoured to compromise with his (N's) creditors, and who applied the said property in paying off a portion of his debts. About a fortnight after the trust-deed was executed, N filed a suit against one H and others. That suit was dismissed, and N was ordered to pay H's costs. In execution of that decree for costs, H, in July 1882, attached a house which was part of the property settled by the trust-deed of April 1877. Bankruptcy in Mauritius—Right of suit by trustee under foreign composition deed in British India—Judgment of foreign Court—Insolvency—Stamp Act (1 of 1879), s 31—Registration Act (III of 1877), s 17 (e).

—A debtor and the firm of which he was a member were adjudicated bankrupts in Mauritius, and a receiver was appointed by the Court. Subsequently the creditors met and resolved that, if the adjudication was annulled, a composition, payable by instalments, be accepted in full satisfaction of their debts, and that the security of the plaintiff's firm be accepted for payment of such composition, and that the bankrupts' estate be assigned to that firm, and that the plaintiff be appointed trustee to carry out such arrangement. An instrument was executed to give effect to these resolutions, and was concurred in by the receiver and approved by the Court, which annulled the adjudication, and ordered that the bankrupts' estate in Mauritius and India vest in the plaintiff, who was appointed trustee to carry out the said composition with full powers of realization. The plaintiff now sued to recover the moveable and immoveable property of the bankrupts in India. Held (1) that the above instrument was valid as a composition-deed, and did not require to be stamped and registered as a conveyance; and that any surplus that might remain after payment to the creditors did not belong to the plaintiff's firm, but was subject to a trust for the bankrupts; (2) that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for the amount expended by him in payment of the creditors, together with such costs as were incurred by him in recovering debts due to the estate and could not be recovered from the debtors, and the costs of certain sales and a mortgage incurred in realization of the estate; (3) that plaintiff was entitled to a decree for possession of the immoveable property until the sum due was paid to him by the defendants or was satisfied out of the rents and profits of the property. No order made by the Court at Mauritius can operate to transfer the ownership of immoveable property in British India. After K's death, the plaintiff sued for an account and for redemption of some of K's land which had been originally mortgaged by K to the defendant. It was contended in defence that the deed created a trust for the payment of K's debts, and that the defendant was entitled to tack on to the mortgage debt a simple contract debt which K owed to him. It was found that the defendant was the only unpaid creditor, and that the property was more than sufficient to pay the debt. Held that the deed did not create a trust for K's creditors, the object, on the contrary, being the preservation of the family property. Held, further, that due effect could not be given to the whole of the instrument, unless construed as a conveyance to the plaintiff, charged as between himself and K with the payment of K's debts. Held also that during K's life his creditors could not claim to be paid under this instrument, in the absence of any communication between them and the plaintiff, capable of being construed as an admission by him that he held the property as trustee for them, although they might possibly impeach it. 1. ———— Existence of relief which can be granted—Civil Procedure Code, s. 15.—No declaration of right can be made in a suit under s. 15, Act VIII of 1859, unless the plaintiff can show that there is some relief which the Court can give. *BAIJ

2. ———— Existence of right to consequential relief—Declaration of right for relief in other suit.—A declaratory decree ought not to be made unless there is shown to be a right to some consequential relief which, if asked for, might have been given by the Court, or unless a declaration of right is required as a step to relief in some other Court.

5. ———— Suits for declarations of abstract rights—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 15.
—S. 15 of Act VIII of 1859 refers to declarations which are binding relatively to the parties before the Court, not to declarations of abstract right or bare declarations of trust, exclusive of any practical equity. MUZHUR HOSSEIN v. DINOBUNDUO SEN

6. ———— Right to consequential relief —Question relating to third persons not parties to suit.—The question proposed for adjudication in the suit, in which a declaratory decree was sought, being in effect one not between the plaintiff and the defendant, but between the plaintiff and third persons not parties to the suit, the suit was dismissed in reference to the ruling of the Privy Council in Vijia Ragunadah Rani Kolandapuri Natchiar v. Dora-singa Taver, 15 B. L. R., 83, dated the 10th of Feb-

2. SUITS CONCERNING DOCUMENTS —concluded.

33. ——— Suit for cancellation of document and for possession—Withdrawing portion of claim—Specific Relief Act, s. 42.—Plaintiffs, members of a Malabar tarwad, sued (1) for the cancellation of a deed of gift of certain immoveable property alleged to belong to their tarwad; (2) for restoration of the property, the subject of gift, either to plaintiff No. 1 or defendant No. 1 the present karnavan, on behalf of the tarwad. The Munsif dismissed plaintiff's suit on the merits. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge allowed plaintiffs, who were unable to pay the Court-fees for recovery of the property, to withdraw that portion of the claim, and decreed for plaintiff as to the remaining portion, viz., for cancellation of the document. On second appeal it was held, reversing the decree below, that, the prayer for restoration of the property being in the circumstances of the case maintainable, it was not competent to plaintiffs to restrict themselves to the other kind of relief sought, and that the maintenance of the suit in its maimed form would be an evasion of s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act. BIKUTTI v. KALENDAR [I. L. R., 14 Mad., 267]

34. ——— Consequential relief—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Suit by a member of a tarwad for a decree declaratory of the invalidity of a kanom granted to other members by the karnavan of the tarwad—Attornment of tenants—Possession, Transfer of.—Where a kanom of tarwad property is granted by the karnavan to members of the tarwad, and the property in question remains in the possession of the karnavan on behalf of the tarwad, all that is necessary for a junior member to do in order to prevent the possession becoming adverse to the tarwad is to obtain a declaration that the kanom which is relied on as the cause of adverse possession is invalid. But if the kanom is granted to a stranger to the family, who is in possession, possession must then be sought for as relief consequent on the declaration. An attornment of tenants to the kanomdars does not operate as a transfer of possession from the tarwad to the kanomdars. Subramanyan v. Paramasvaran, I. L. R., 11 Mad., 116, followed, and Bikutti v. Kalendar, I. L. R., 14 Mad., 267, Abdulkadar v. Mahomed, I. L. R., 15 Mad., 15, and Narayana v. Shankunni, I. L. ### 3. ADOPTIONS.

35. ——— Suit to set aside deeds giving and receiving in adoption—Cause of action.—A declaratory decree cannot be made, unless the plaintiff would be entitled to consequential relief if he asked for it. It is discretionary with a Court to grant a declaratory decree, and the Courts in India ought to be most careful in exercising such discretion. A widow of a Hindu, sued B as father and guardian of C to have it declared that the deeds executed by A and B, one of giving C in

36. ——— Suit to have adoption declared void—Declaratory decree not obtainable by absolute right—Discretion of Court.—It is discretionary with a Court to grant or to refuse a declaratory decree with regard to the circumstances—Sreenarain Mitter v. Kishen Soondery Dassee, 11 B. L. R., 171: L. R., I. A., Sup. Vol., 149, referred to and followed. A talukhdar died leaving a widow; also a son, who, having succeeded as talukhdar, died childless. This son's widow, being in possession, sued for a declaration that an adoption by the father's widow, to the father, was void and ineffectual. The ground of suit was that, at some time or other after the death of the plaintiff, the person alleging himself to have been adopted might obtain the talukhdari, unless his adoption should now be negatived. With regard to all the circumstances, the refusal of such a declaration was approved by their Lordships. If the person alleged to have been adopted should sue hereafter, the question would be decided whether he was validly adopted or not. PIETHI PAL KUNWAR v. GUMAN KUNWAR I. L. R., 17 Calc., 933 [L. The effect of these decisions, taken in conjunction with the decisions of the Privy Council, in construing the provisions of the Indian Act, is that right may be made the foundation of relief to be had in another Court. The plaintiff, purporting to be the next heir, brought a suit against the life tenant of a zamindari and made another claimant to the succession to the zamindari a defendant in the suit. The plaintiff prayed for a decree declaratory of the plaintiff's right to succeed on the death of the zamindar, and made allegations of waste in respect of which he asked relief. Held that, even if the plaintiff had proved the alleged acts of waste, which he had not done there was not a right to consequential relief which would entitle him to a declaratory decree STEDMATHOO MOOTHOO VIGITA RAGHOVADAR

61. ———— Suit by reversioner to establish his title to property sold in execution of decree obtained against a widow as representative of her deceased husband's estate—Fraud—Collusion—Right of reversioner to possession.—The plaintiff, as the nearest heir of one O T who died intestate in 1873, sued to set aside a sale of certain immoveable property belonging to the estate of the deceased, which had been sold on the 3rd November 1875, in execution of a money-decree obtained by the defendant J against B V, the widow of O T. B V had married a second time in 1876, and her second husband was the brother of the purchaser at the execution-sale. The plaintiff alleged that the decree had been fraudulently and collusively obtained on a bond in O T's name, which had been forged by J. The suit was brought on the 28th January 1878, and the plaintiff prayed that the sale might be cancelled, having been made in order to defeat his rights; that he might be declared the heir of O T; and that possession of the property with mesne profits might be awarded to him. Held on the evidence that the suit against B V was collusive, and that the sale in execution was in fraud of the plaintiff's right. He was, therefore, entitled to a decree declaring that he was not bound by the sale of the 3rd November 1875, in the suit brought by J against B V as representative of her deceased deed of mortgage of the property, which did not specifically state the amount of the estate mortgaged, and also a bond, upon which the obligee obtained a decree, in execution whereof he attached part of the property recorded in the name of the obligor. The members of the family brought a suit, in which they prayed for a declaration that the mortgage executed by the widow was invalid, and that the property was not liable for the amount due thereunder, or to attachment in execution of the decree obtained upon the bond. Held that, if the widow's possession were only a possession by the plaintiffs' consent entitling her merely to receive the profits for her maintenance, the plaintiffs might eject her from the property, and that, before they could obtain a declaration under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, they must seek their relief by ejectment, that being the substantial and real relief appropriate to the cause of action. On the other hand, if the widow had an estate in possession, given to her in exchange for her maintenance, she had an interest which she was competent to alienate. Held also that, inasmuch as the deed of mortgage contained no description of the amount of the estate mortgaged by the widow, and upon its face mortgaged her share of the property only, it could have no operation beyond her share, and the Court would not be justified in granting a declaration under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, merely because the plaintiffs apprehended some possible future claim based upon the allegation that the transfer comprised the entire estate. *BHOLAI v. 74. — Suit by reversioner for possession—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Civil Procedure Code, s. 578.—A suit brought against K, the widow of R, a Hindu, by the representatives of R's brothers, H and P, for possession of his estate, ended in a compromise by which the defendant recognized the plaintiffs' rights, and conceded that the family was joint. After K's death, M, a daughter of R, brought a suit on her own behalf against the above-mentioned plaintiffs for possession of her father's estate, but afterwards withdrew her claim. Subsequently S, M's son, who had been born after K's compromise, brought a suit against M and the representatives of H and P to recover possession of the estate, on the allegation that, the family being a divided one, he was entitled, under the Hindu law, to succeed to such estate, and that both the compromise entered into by K and the withdrawal of the former suit by M were in fraud of his succession, and did not affect his rights. The Court of first instance found that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed to the estate, but that, his mother being still alive, he was entitled to possession after her death only, and, upon these findings, gave him a decree declaring his right to possession on M's death. The lower Appellate Court reversed the decree, holding that the compromise entered into by K was conclusive against the plaintiff's claim, and also that, during his mother's lifetime, he had no locus standi to maintain the suit. Held that the prayer in the plaint was wide enough to include a prayer for declaratory relief such as the first Court had given. Also that it could not be said that a daughter's son was not, under any condition, competent to maintain a declaratory suit of this nature during the lifetime of his mother or maternal aunt, in respect of his maternal grandfather's property, to the full ownership of which he had a reversionary right. Also that the awarding of declaratory relief, as regulated by s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, is a discretionary power which Courts of equity are empowered to exercise with reference to the circumstances of each case and the nature of the facts stated in the plaint, and the prayer of the plaintiff; that so long as a Court of first instance possesses jurisdiction to entertain a declaratory suit, and, entering into the merits of the case, arrives at right conclusions and awards a declaratory decree, such a decree cannot be reversed in appeal simply because the discretion has been improperly exercised; and that such improper exercise of discretion under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act has no higher footing than that of an error, defect, or irregularity, not affecting the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court, within the meaning of s. 578 of the Civil Procedure Code. This does not imply that, even in cases where the discretionary power to award declaratory relief has been exercised wholly arbitrarily, and in a manner grossly inconsistent with judicial principles, the Court of appeal would have no power to interfere. *Ram Kanaye Chuckerbutty v. In 1882 a suit was brought by S and G against V to recover the value of a branch of a mango tree wrongfully taken by the defendant, and for maintenance of possession over the grove in which the tree was situate. The suit was dismissed, and it was decided that R was not the owner of the grove, nor was G the owner. In 1885 B brought a suit against G, S, V, and A, to whom V had sold some of the trees, claiming a declaration of her right and possession of the grove, upon the allegation that the proceedings of 1882 were carried on in collusion between S and G on the one hand and V on the other, for the purpose of improperly preventing her from asserting her rights. Held also that, if it should turn out that there was fraud and collusion in the proceedings of 1882 and an attempt to interfere with the plaintiff's right as reversioner to the grove on the death of her mother, she would be entitled in the present suit to claim not only a declaration of her right, but also to have the grove reduced into the

There must be something in the case either in the nature of an invasion of some right, or in the shape of an impediment or obstacle in the way of full enjoyment of proprietary right, to found a claim to a declaratory relief, but a mere allegation, or a mere threat without action taken or founded upon it will not be sufficient to entitle a party to a declaration of his title *JAY ALI v. 91. ——— Suit by person out of possession—Omission to ask for possession—Refusal to recognize proprietary right.—In a suit in which the plaintiffs stated that they had already obtained a decree for possession of certain land, and had received formal possession, and stated their cause of action to be "the defendant's act of not recognizing us as their landlords and thereby preventing us exercising our proprietary rights in respect of the land in suit, and not allowing us to make a measurement of that land, and also withholding payment of rent" praying for a decree establishing their proprietary right and declaring the defendants to be their tenants,—Held that the declaratory decree prayed for could be made notwithstanding the plaintiffs might have asked for possession of the lands. LOKENATH SURMA v. KESHAB RAM DOSS . . . 1. L. R., 13 Calc., 147

92. ——— Denial of title without injurious act—Annoyance.—In suits for a declaration of title to a divided share of ancestral property, the ground alleged in each case for seeking the declaration was that the representatives of the brothers of the plaintiff's father had refused to be parties to the registering of the property in plaintiff's name, and had executed a deed of sale of it to a third party (third defendant), and registered him as the purchaser. The Court of first instance in each case decreed for the plaintiff. The Appellate Court, following Padagaligum Pillai v. Shanmugham Pillai, 2 Mad., 333, dismissed the suits on the ground that the plaintiffs were not in a position to maintain them. On special appeal,—Held that the suits should be remanded for a declaration of the plaintiff's title, if established. To maintain a suit for a declaration of title, some adverse act, intended and calculated to be prejudicial to the title which the plaintiff seeks a declaration of, must appear to have been done by the defendant. The mere denial of the title, or doing an act which causes annoyance, cannot imperil the plaintiff's title, nor have any serious effect on the quiet enjoyment of his proprietary right, and is not sufficient to support such a suit. The principle upon which the decision in Padagaligum Pillai v. Shanmugham Pillai proceeds is inapplicable to suits under s. 15 of the Civil Procedure Code. KARYAN v. PERIA SIDDEN, KARYAN v. Plaintiff had previously sued the first three defendants to establish the relation of jenmi and kanamkar and to recover the land. He failed and then brought the present suit. Held that this was a case of the employment of the device of a suit for a declaration of title in order to get back land by a crooked and not legal process, after failure to recover by proper legal means, the intention being to cut off the defendants (the tenants) from the plea of res judicata. It being found as a fact that A had neither been a party to, nor been present in, the resumption proceedings, that he had been in quiet and undisturbed possession of the lands which he now claimed for more than twelve years before the institution of his suit and that proceedings had been taken by the defendant calculated to disturb such possession, Held that A was entitled, under s 42 of Act I of 1877, to the declaration prayed for. land which had been collected by B. It appeared that there had been no denial of the plaintiffs' rights before 1889, that no rent had been collected for several years before suit, the mortgagors who had remained in possession as lessees after the execution of the mortgages having refused to attorn to B. Held that the suits were not barred by Specific Relief Act, s. 42, for want of a prayer for possession; that the suits were not barred by limitation save as to the claim for rent; that the transactions having been proved to be benami in character, the plaintiffs were entitled to a declaration of their two-thirds right under the mortgages of 1884 and a like declaration as to half of the mortgage of 1880; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to possession of the mortgage documents of 1884 and the other documents connected therewith, but not the others. MAHABALA BHATTA v. He applied to the Court to have the sale set aside, but failing in his application he sued both the decree-holder and the auction-purchaser for a declaration of his title to the property in question. The Assistant Judge held on appeal that the suit was not maintainable on the grounds that a separate suit could not be brought, as the question of title was one for decision in the execution-proceedings, and that, even if the point could be raised in a separate suit, the present suit was premature, as the plaintiff should have waited till he was dispossessed by the auction-purchaser. Held that the suit was not premature. It was found that the plaintiffs had separated themselves from the defendants, and had for more than twelve years been excluded to their own knowledge from the joint family property. Held that if, as alleged by the plaintiffs, plaintiff No. 1 was the de jure ejaman of the family, he was entitled to the possession and management of the family property, and a suit for a mere declaration of his right would not lie. *Chandu v. The former can obtain a declaratory decree and an injunction restraining the wrong doer. In such a suit the defence was that the land was wakf, and the defendant mutwalli of it. Both Courts found that the plaintiff was in possession as purchaser from some of those who were entitled to sell. But the first Court did not find a fact which the Appellate Court found. Held that the property had been constituted wakf. Both Courts however concurred in the finding that the defendant at all events was not the mutwalli and had no title. Held that the plain-

132. ————— Consequential relief—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 42, 56—Amendment of plaintiff on appeal—Raising fresh issue on appeal.—The plaintiff obtained a decree in a suit in which he averred that he was entitled to the office of Sheik of Kallai and to certain properties attached thereto, and prayed for a declaration that the defendant had no right either to the office of Sheik or to the properties in question, for an injunction restraining him from interfering with the properties or doing anything in any way inconsistent with the plaintiff's right to the office, and for further and other relief. It appeared on the evidence for the defence that the defendant was in possession of part of the property, but no issue had been framed as to the maintainability of the suit under the last clause of the Specific Relief Act, s. 42. Held (on appeal by the defendant) that the Court of first instance should take evidence and try an issue specifically directed to this question. It having appeared on the evidence recorded on that issue that the defendant was substantially in possession of the office of Sheik and of its emoluments,—Held that the suit was not maintainable, although an injunction was asked for as relief consequential on the declaration. The plaintiffs sued for a declaration of their title to this property and for a declaration that the karar was not binding on them. An issue was framed on the question whether the suit was maintainable for want of a prayer for all relief consequential on these declarations. Held (1) that the suit was not maintainable for want of a prayer for possession of the lands under demise; (2) that the plaintiffs should not be permitted to amend the plaint on appeal by the addition of such a prayer. NARAYANA v. 134. ————— Suit for a mere declaration of title without consequential relief—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Injunction—Amendment of plaintiff.—The plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was entitled to succeed, on his father's death, to a talukhdari estate, to the exclusion of defendant No. 1, who, he alleged, was a supposititious child set up by his step-mother to defeat the plaintiff's right of inheritance. It appeared that defendant No. 1 had obtained a decree against the plaintiff's father, establishing his legitimacy and declaring him entitled to receive maintenance out of the estate in question. In accordance with this decree, the talukhdari settlement officer (defendant No. 2), who was in management of the estate under Act XXI of 1881, paid defendant No. 1 an allowance of ₹200 a month on account of his maintenance. The plaintiff alleged that the payment to defendant No. 1 was illegal and wrongful, but he did not ask for an injunction restraining him from receiving the allowance. The defendants contended that the suit was not maintainable because the plaintiff had sued for a mere declaration of title without asking for consequential relief. Held (CANDY, J., doubting) that the suit was barred under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, as the plaintiff had omitted to seek the relief of an injunction against defendant No. 1, restraining him from receiving future payment of maintenance. Held, further, that plaintiff was at liberty to amend his plaint by praying for an injunction as against both defendants. SARDARSINGJI v. In that year the defendant company was formed for the purpose of taking over the business from him together with the capital and assets engaged therein. The nominal capital of the company was ₹25,00,000, divided into one thousand shares of ₹2,500 each. On the 22nd July 1864, an agreement carrying out the above object was executed between W W and the defendant company. This agreement set forth the assets and property to be transferred, and classified them as (a) “fixed assets,” which consisted of immoveable property, buildings, etc., valued at ₹2,76,000 or thereabouts; and (b) assets other than fixed assets which consisted of what was called “forest operations,” and of valuable contracts, rights, and concessions from the King of Burma, etc. The agreement further specified the consideration to be paid to W W for each of these classes of assets. For the “fixed assets” he was (under the 12th clause of the agreement) to receive one hundred fully paid-up shares of the company. That clause contained certain provisions as to the payment of the ordinary dividend upon those shares, and concluded with a provision that the directors of the company should not be bound to consent five years, his executors or administrators should not be entitled to the said extra or preferential dividend after the expiration of the said period, notwithstanding they might continue to hold the said shares. Subsequently to the execution of this agreement, the business and assets were transferred to the company by W W, and one hundred fully paid up shares were duly allotted to him under cl 12, and his name was entered on the register of shareholders. In 1888 W W, then domiciled in England, died. By his will he appointed his three brothers—R W, L A W, and A F W—his executors, and he directed that his executors should hold the said shares and all his interest therein and attached to the holding thereof upon trust for such of his said brothers as might survive him, if more than one, as joint tenants. R W died in the testator's lifetime, and only A F W proved the will. On the 27th September 1888, letters of administration with the will annexed were granted by the High Court of Bombay to the plaintiff in this suit (F Y S) as attorney for the said executor A F W. On the 29th September 1889, the said letters of administration were produced to and registered with, the defendant company. The hundred shares continued to stand in the testator's name in the register of shareholders. In a parallel column in the register, under the heading "Remarks," the following entry was made:—"Administration in India to the estate of W W has been granted to Mr. F Y S as attorney for A F W." Save for this entry, the register remained unaltered after the testator's death. The plaintiff now sued to have it declared that cl 13 of the agreement was still in operation, and that, as such administrator as aforesaid, he was entitled to the extra or preferential dividend payable on the said one hundred shares if and when there should be sufficient net profits to allow payments thereof under the said clause. The company disputed the plaintiff's claim. They contended that A F W, the proving executor of the testator's will, had ceased to hold the shares

Before that decree had been executed, the property in question was mortgaged to two other persons. After the purchase by the plaintiffs, the mortgagees, with knowledge of the auction-purchasers' rights, brought a suit for sale upon their mortgage without making the former auction-purchasers parties. The former auction-purchasers thereupon sued the purchasers under the decree upon the mortgage for a declaration that they and their interests were not affected by the suit for sale and by the decree for sale and the sale in execution of that decree. Held the plaintiffs in that suit were not bound either to tender the mortgage-money, or to offer to redeem, or to frame their suit as a suit for redemption, and that their not having done so did not deprive them of their right to a declaration. Bhawanani Prasad v. his debt by sale of the mortgaged property. Before the property was advertised for sale, the defendants, who were D's brothers, objected under s. 257 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), alleging that D was not the sole owner of the property; that they were joint owners with him; that they had set aside the property for religious purposes; and that D had no right to mortgage it. The Court executing the decree thereupon ordered that the applicants' (defendants') claim should be notified in the proclamation of sale. Plaintiff then filed a suit against the defendants, praying for a declaration that the property belonged to D exclusively, and the defendants had no right or interest in it. Held that, under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), the plaintiff was entitled to the declaration prayed for. Plaintiff having himself purchased the property after this claim for declaration had been allowed by the Subordinate Judge, it was contended that he was not entitled any longer to a declaratory decree. Held that the change of circumstances brought about by the plaintiff himself purchasing the property did not take away the right to sue which had already accrued to him. Govinda v. Court, whilst holding that the appointment of the pattamah was invalid, dismissed the suit on the ground that the amendment had been made after the lapse of the period of limitation. Held that the suit for a declaration would lie without consequential relief being prayed for, inasmuch as its object was not to establish any legal character or any right to any property in the plaintiffs but was in effect to have an act done by the other trustees in contravention of duty declared null and void. Even if s 42 of the Specific Relief Act applied to such a decree, which was doubtful, no further relief than the declaration was necessary as the custody of the documents and jewels by the pattamah was merely that of a servant under the trustees with whom the possession in fact and in law remained. Where, on the occasion of the batwarra of a zamindari, the proprietors of an outside talukh interfered and caused the Collector to exclude certain land of an ousut talukh from the maps and records then made, without opposition from the shikmi talukhdars, it was held that their conduct amounted to making evidence which might eventually be used adversely to the rights of the ousut talukhdars, who, therefore, had a cause of action against them justifying a suit for a declaratory title. *OBHOYA CHURN SIMLYE v. After the British entered, the defendants gave him kabuliats and paid him rent. The British authorities also recognized his rights and received rents from him. Subsequently the defendants disputed plaintiff's rights, and applied to the Collector to have their own names registered as jotedars. Their applications having been successful, plaintiff sued for a declaration of his title under the pottah. Held that, as plaintiff's title had been acknowledged by the defendants and recognized by the British authorities, he was entitled to the declaration sought. *SREE KANT SHAHA v. A suit for foreclosure was then brought by the three mortgagees who obtained a decree in 1856. Prior to the decree, one J S, who had purchased the interest of S, was made a party to the suit, and he sold his interest to the plaintiff's father in 1861. He then applied to the Collector, and, in spite of the plaintiff's objection, had his name recorded in the town as proprietor in succession to M. To cancel the effect of this proceeding, the plaintiff sued for a declaration of title and confirmation of possession. Held that, as the plaintiff was in possession and had been so from the time of the conveyance by J S, there was no necessity for his taking out execution of the foreclosure decree, the expiry of which, therefore, could not deprive him of his title to the declaratory decree now sought, the defendant's conduct in the mutation proceeding being sufficient cause of action. ABRAHAM RAM & MOHENDRO PERSHAD TEWARAN . . . 30 W. of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), because the plaintiffs might have sought further relief than a mere declaration of title, and omitted to do so. He was of opinion that the attachment constituted a dispossession, and that the plaintiffs might have asked to be replaced in possession, or, at any rate, for the removal of the attachment. Held by the High Court on appeal that the plaint was not open to objection on the ground that it only asked for a declaratory decree without any consequential relief. Held that the prohibitory order to D did not constitute a dispossession of D and still less of the plaintiffs, and that they could not have properly asked for removal of the attachment by a cancellation of the prohibitory order to D so long as they admitted that D had an interest in the attached property. Held also that the plaintiffs could not have properly asked for any consequential relief in their suit, but that, when they instituted it, they were entitled, and indeed bound, to ask for a declaration of their right, if only to prevent a purchaser at the sale, under the defendants' decree against D, from afterwards alleging that he had purchased without notice of the plaintiffs' claim. NARAYANRAY DAMODAR v. The plaintiff thereupon brought this suit against the Secretary of State for India in Council for a declaration that the land on which the otta stood was his property, and not that of the Government. Held that, the public roads being vested by s. 37 of the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879) in the Government of Bombay, they were "interested to deny" the plaintiff's title to the land, and therefore, under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), the plaintiff (subject to the discretion of the Court) was entitled to a declaration as against the Government of his right to the land, and the plaintiff was not called upon to wait until the Government had taken possession of the land. It was contended that the jurisdiction of the Court to make the declaration prayed for was taken away by the last clause of s. 133, which provides that "no order made by a Magistrate under this section shall be called in question in any Civil Court." Held that the Magistrate's order under this section is not a conclusive determination of the question of title. *SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. ## DECREE—continued.

1. FORM OF DECREE.

(a) GENERAL CASES.

1. ———— Necessity for a decree—Act XIX of 1873 (N.-W. P. Land Revenue Act), ss. 113, 114, 115—Omission to frame decree in case in which a question of title is decided—Second appeal.—It is essential that in a suit under the Civil Procedure Code a decree should be drawn up. Held, therefore, that in a proceeding under s. 113 of the North-West Provinces Land Revenue Act, where the rights of the parties are decided, a decree should be drawn up giving effect to the decision. An Assistant Collector passed a decision under s. 113 declaring the rights of the parties, but did not draw up a decree giving effect to such decision. There was an appeal to the District Court from such decision, which made a decree affirming it. Held by STUART, C.J., on second appeal, that the defect arising from the want of a decree on the record of the Court of first instance was a bar to the hearing of the second appeal, and the proceedings of the District Court should be set aside, and the case should be sent back to the Assistant Collector in order that he might frame a decree. Held by STRAIGHT, J., that the decree of the District Court was appealable, such defect notwithstanding, and the appeal should be decreed, and the decree of the District Court reversed, and the case be sent back to the Assistant Collector for the purpose aforesaid. Observations by STUART, C.J., on the absence in the Code of Civil Procedure of any mandatory provisions in reference to the framing of decrees. RANJIT SINGH v. ILAMI BAKSHI [I. L. R., 5 All., 520]

2. ———— N.-W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873), ss. 113 and 114—Partition, Application for—Order on objection as to title raised in course of partition-proceedings.—A Collector or Assistant Collector trying a question of title raised in the course of the hearing of an application for partition under the N.-W. P. Land Revenue Act (XIX of 1873) is not bound to cause a formal decree to be drawn up embodying the result of his order or decision on such point. NIJAZ BEGAM v. ABDUL KARIM KHAN. I. L. R., 14 All., 500

3. ———— Drawing up decrees—Duty of Judge.—The duty of Judges in seeing that decrees are properly drawn up pointed out. RUSTOM ALLY v. AMEER ALLY SAUDAGUR. 10 W. R., 487

4. ———— Insufficient payment of Court-fees, Procedure to be adopted on—Appellate Court, Power of.—In a suit for specific performance of a contract for the sale of land and for possession, the plaintiff did not pay the full Court-fees, but the Munsif heard the suit and dismissed it. An appeal by the plaintiff was entertained by the Subordinate Judge, who passed a decree for specific performance, and decreed that, if the deficient Court-fees were paid, possession should be given to the plaintiff, but that, on failure to pay the Court-fees, the claim for possession should be dismissed. Held that, the plaintiff not having in the first instance paid the full Court-fees, he should have been called upon by the Munsif to do so. As this was not done, the Court of first appeal was not in error in entertaining the appeal which was preferred by the plaintiff; but he should have passed no decree until the fees due had been paid, and if they were not paid, the decree should have been for the dismissal of the whole suit. KRISHNASAMI v. SUNDARAPPAIYAR

[I. L. R., 18 Mad., 415]

5. ———— Contents of decree.—Decrees of Court should be drawn up by the Judge in such a way as to make them self-contained and capable of execution without referring to any other document. JOYTARA DASSIE v. MAHOMED MOBARUK. I. L. R., 8 Cal., 975; 11 C. L. R., 399
DWARKANATH HALDAR v. KAMALA KANTH HALDAR. 3 B. L. R., Ap., 129 [12 W. R., 98]

6. ———— Duty of judgment-debtor and decree-holder.—It is the duty of the judgment-debtor, as well as the decree-holder, to see that the decree is properly drawn up; and if he does not do so, the Court will execute it according to its terms. KRISHNOKISHORE DUTT v. ROOPALL DASS [I. L. R., 8 Cal., 687; 10 C. L. R., 609]

7. ———— Distinctness and consistency with judgment requisite.—The decree should not be vague, but explicit in its terms as well as in accordance with the judgment. CHUNDER MONEE DOSSEE v. DHURONEEDHUR LARORY [7 W. R., 2]

NUNDO KISHORE SINGH v. LALLA BURJUN LALL [15 W. R., 154]

NUTHOO SINGH v. RAM BUKSH SINGH [18 W. R., 34]

8. ———— Omission to specify boundaries in decree for land—Vague decree—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, s. 190.—A decree which was passed for a specified quantity of land contiguous to the plaintiff's estate, but which gave no boundaries of such land, was held, with reference to s. 190, Act VIII of 1859, to be indefinite and incapable of execution. DWARKANATH ROY v. JANNOBEE CHOWDHRAIN 19 W. R., 81

DARBAREE SAYAL v. FATU DHALEE [23 W. R., 285]

The remedy is to apply to have the decree rectified. DARBAREE SAYAL v. FATU DHALEE

SRISTEEDHUR BHUTTACHARJEE v. KALEE DOSS DEY. 24 W. R., 479

9. ———— Omission to specify boundaries in decree for land—Specific statement of relief granted by decree.—A claimed certain lands, claiming one portion of such lands under one title and the remainder under another and separate title. In the schedule to his plaint he gave the boundaries of the entire lands claimed by him, but did not give any boundary between the lands claimed by him under one title and the lands claimed by him under the other title. The lower Court decreed the whole of the plaintiff's claim. The lower Appellate Court confirmed so much of the decree of the Court of first instance as declared the plaintiff's right to the first portion of the land and dismissed his suit as to the remainder, and, there being no evidence to show what lands in particular out of the whole claim were comprised in the first portion for which it gave him a decree, directed them to be ascertained in execution. Held that the decree was bad as it should have specified the particular lands decreed. KANGAL CHANDRA RAO v KANYE LALL RAO

[1 L. R., 4 Calo., 69]

10 Anticipated difficulty of executing decree—The Court will not be deterred from making a decree by the difficulties to be expected in carrying it out. PURAPPANVALINGAM CHETTI v NALLASIVAN CHETTI

[1 Mnd., 415]

11 Decree not specifying relief granted—Decree on appeal—A decree of an Appellate Court not specifying the relief granted but merely repeating the judgment "that the appeal be decreed" is not a sufficient compliance with the requirements of the law. HUSSAUN SINGH v PUR SHUN SINGH

[2 N. W., 415]

12 Refund of purchase money—Decree on appeal—In reversing a decree on appeal, the Court should state the relief which they consider the appellant entitled to. A purchased a Government revenue paying estate from B but on going to take possession he found C, who claimed under a patni grant also from B in possession. A case was therefore instituted by B under Act IV of 1840, but it was ordered that C should be retained in possession. A then brought a suit against B and C to recover his purchase-money. No relief was asked against C, nor had C anything to do with the sale from B to A. The suit was dismissed. On appeal it was ordered merely "that the decree be reversed and the appeal decreed with costs." Nothing was asked against C in the grounds of appeal. In execution of this decree, C's property was seized and sold. C petitioned the Principal Sudder Ameen, who held that he was not liable, but on appeal the Judge held that he was liable for the purchase-money, and his property had been rightly sold in execution for it. Held, on special appeal that C was not liable to refund the purchase money. BELL v GURUDAS ROY

[1 B. L. R., A. C., 50]

13 Decree on appeal—Distinction pointed out between a decree of an Appellate Court simply reversing the decree of the lower Court and a decree which, reversing that decree, goes on to record judgment for the other party. HUNDEKISHORE ROY v KALEEKISHORE SEN

[3 W. R., 114]

[5 W. R., 38]

16 Decree to have a future operation—In a suit by a landlord to recover possession where defendant, who was a tenant at-will, had received no notice to determine his tenancy, plaintiff obtained a decree to come into operation at the beginning of the next Amli year. Held that there was nothing in the Civil Procedure Code to prevent a decree of this nature being passed. RAM NARAIN MAJUMDER v RUTEMA SOGA

[23 W. R., 399]

17 Decree to have a future operation—A decree to have future operation was held not allowable, e.g., to declare that the costs of a suit should be borne by the unsuccessful party in a suit to be hereafter brought. KASHIN CHUNDER DEX v BUNGSHES BUDDU DEX

18 Decree dealing only partly with case—Allegation of fraud—The plaintiff alleged fraud in the defendants in that they represented themselves as agents, when in fact they were principals, in fifty eight instances in which they had made contracts with the plaintiffs. The prayer of the plaintiff was "that the defendants may either be held personally responsible on the several said contracts as purchasers thereunder, or otherwise that they may be held personally liable for damages, for fraudulently representing that they were authorized to effect the contracts aforesaid," and further asked for an account and for damages. It appeared clear to the Judge below, on the evidence, that the defendants acted as principals, and he treated the case on the issue of fraud alone. Ten cases only of the fifty-eight were selected by the plaintiffs, on which they gave evidence of the fraud; and the Judge found in their favour as to three, and held that the plaint charging fraud, the plaintiffs could not succeed on any cause of action incidentally disclosed. The decree was drawn up with reference only to the three cases on which the fraud was found, so far as finally to dispose of them, but ordered an enquiry as to the fraud in all the rest. Held that the case was appealable, and that the decision of the Court below was right. GHASSERAM MISSEER v. WILLIAMSON . . . 2 Ind. Jur., N. S., 205

19. ————— Decree for larger amount than that claimed—Consent of parties—Compromise of suit awarding plaintiff more than amount claimed—Execution of decree limited to amount claimed—Suit for larger amount awarded in compromise.—By consent of parties and the leave of the Court, a suit may be amended to cover an increased claim, and there is nothing in the law which prevents the parties to a suit enlarging by consent or compromise the original claim, and getting or allowing a decree for a greater amount of money or land than that originally asked for. MOHIBALLAH v. IMAMI . . . I. L. R., 9 All., 229

(b) ACCOUNT.

20. ————— Account, Suit for—Principal and agent—Duty of Court as to decree.—Where a plaint alleged a continued agency in the defendant and prayed for relief on the ground that there was a specific balance against him, and prayed for the recovery of such sum or any larger sum that might be proved to be payable,—Held that such suit was essentially one for an account, and that the Court following the general rule ought not to make a final decree at the hearing, but should order an account to be taken of such agent's dealings with the plaintiff's money. HURRONATH ROY v. KRISHNA COOMAR BUKSHEE

21. ————— Decree for account of dissolved partnership—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 215—Procedure—Onus of proof—Taking of accounts.—In a suit for an account of a dissolved partnership, a decree should be passed under the Civil Procedure Code, s. 215, in accordance with form No. 132 in sch. IV; and it should direct an account to be taken of the dealings and transactions between the parties, and of the credits, property, and effects due and belonging to the late partnership, and it should direct the appointment of a receiver of the outstanding debts and effects. ## (d) ARBITRATION.

23. ————— Arbitration, Reference to—Prohibition to proceed with award.—The Court of first instance in its decree "prohibited the arbitrators from giving an award." As they were not parties to the suit in substitution of that order, it was ordered that the defendants be enjoined from proceeding in the award before the arbitrators and from collecting certain debts released in their favour from attachment. PARNESHAH DAT v. HARI NAIK

[7 N. W., 357]

24. ————— Arbitration, Reference to, when one party declines to consent—Suit for share of land.—In a suit in which plaintiffs claimed a 6-anna share of certain land belonging to a mouzah, it was found on measurement that 262 bighas of the land claimed belonged to that talukh. Pending the suit, all the defendants except one (O) agreed to a reference to arbitration, upon which it was found that 44 bighas, in addition to the 262, belonged to the plaintiffs. Held that the proper decree was that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover, as against all the defendants, including O, a 6-anna share in 262 bighas; and as against all except O, a 6-anna share in the 44 bighas awarded by the arbitrators. DOORGACHURN THAKOOR v. 56. ——— Goods—Suit to recover specific goods in hands of third parties—Alternative claim for value or compensation—Specific Relief Act (1 of 1877), ss. 10, 11.—In execution of a decree obtained by the defendants against one M in the Court of Small Causes, certain goods were attached, to which plaintiff preferred a claim. That claim being disallowed, plaintiff filed, in the City Civil Court, Madras, a suit for and obtained a declaration of his title to the goods, but prior to the date of the decree, namely, in October 1895, the goods attached had been sold by the Court of Small Causes, and certain third parties had become purchasers thereof. On plaintiff, in December 1897, suing "for the recovery of the goods or their value as compensation,"—Held that, the goods not being in the possession or under the control of the defendants, plaintiff was not entitled to a decree for their recovery in specie; and that plaintiff's only remedy was by way of damages for the wrongful taking of his goods at the instance of the defendants. MURUGESA MUDALI v. An order for execution of the decree was set aside by the Principal Sudder Ameen, on the ground that the decree did not warrant the issue of an attachment, since it was not against any person. Held that the decree was informal in not expressing that the debt was to be realized out of the assets of the deceased in the hands of the heir, or that should come to the hands of the heir, but that the Principal Sudder Ameen had jurisdiction to amend and ought to have amended the decree in this respect. ANUND ROY v. The Court of first instance gave the plaintiffs a decree for a monthly allowance and Rs 540 to the widow as arrears of maintenance and Rs 1,000 for the marriage expenses of the daughters. Held that the Court of first instance should have separated the maintenance to which it considered the three plaintiffs respectively entitled, and that, as to the two minor plaintiffs, it should have declared that such maintenance should cease upon their marriage. TULSHA v. 79. ———— Money-decree in suit for foreclosure or sale.—A mortgagee sued for foreclosure or sale in the usual form. The suit was undefended. The plaintiff elected to take a simple money-decree against the mortgagor. The following words were appended to the decree: "Note.—The equity of redemption in the property comprised in the mortgage is not liable to attachment and sale under this decree." After ineffectual attempts to realize his debt, the plaintiff applied to the Court for liberty to sell the mortgaged premises. Held that the Court had a discretionary power to grant or refuse the sale. The note at the end of the decree did not amount to an absolute prohibition against the sale, but was merely meant as a guide to the Court which should have to execute the decree, and to show that execution should not issue against the equity of redemption, except by special leave of the Court. The Court made an order as if there had been a decree for sale in the first instance, except that the account was to be treated as a final account at the date of the decree. NEERUNJUN MOOKERJEE v. 82. — Suit by mortgagee against the mortgagor and purchasers of the mortgaged property.—In execution of a decree, the right, title, and interest in two parcels of property of a judgment debtor, who had previous to the attachment executed a simple mortgage thereof to A, was sold; and B and C respectively purchased them at different prices. A sued the mortgagor and the purchasers B and C for enforcing his lien on the two parcels of property. The suit was dismissed by the first Court, but on appeal the order was "appeal decreed." A entered into a compromise with B, and entered satisfaction of a moiety of the decree. He afterwards issued execution of the other moiety against C, and compelled him to pay. C now sued B for recovery of the proportion of the amount paid by him to A, but which, according to the valuation of the respective properties, should have fallen into the share of B. Held that the proper decree in the suit of A against the mortgagor and B and C would have been a money-decree against the mortgagor only, with a declaration that the two properties were liable to be sold, clear of subsequent incumbrances, in satisfaction of the mortgage-bond debt BHAIKAB CHANDRA MADAK v. 87. ————— Unnecessary declaration—Costs.—A mortgagee holding two mortgages of the same property sold, under the second mortgage, to the plaintiff, and subsequently under the first mortgage to his son, benami for himself. Held, in a suit against the mortgagee and the benamidars, that the plaintiff was entitled to set aside this second sale and to redeem, but that, the mortgagor not being a party, the Court was wrong in introducing into the decree a declaration to the effect that the plaintiff was entitled "as second mortgagee," and had not acquired the equity of redemption belonging to the mortgagor. whereupon plaintiffs informed defendants by letter that their account earned interest at the higher rate provided for in the promissory note. Plaintiffs now sued for the amount due in respect of principal and interest at the rate of 15 per cent per annum from the date of their letter till payment, and asked that, in default of payment on a day to be fixed by the Court, the property might be sold. A decree having been passed in plaintiffs' favour provision was made therein ordering defendants to pay the amount of payment—Held that the decree was correctly drawn. In principle there is no difference between a mortgage decree which has become absolute and ordinary decree for money. After the day fixed for payment, or on the passing of the decree, as the case may be the rights of the parties under the contract become merged in the decree and afterwards there is no more reason for giving interest at the contract rate in the one case than in the other. Rameswar Koer v Syed Nawab Mehd: Hossein Khan, I R, 25 I A, 179 I L R, 26 Cal 39 and Bakar Sayyad v Udit Narain Singh I L R, 21 All 861, referred to COMMERCIAL BANK OF INDIA v ATEENDU LAXTA I L R, 23 Mad., 637

K D was not made a party to this suit. In 1882, one M M A purchased the share in Surajpur, which had been subject to the mortgage sued upon by M R in 1879, but had been exempted from the decree obtained by M R in 1879. In 1892 K D sued for redemption of M R's prior mortgage of 1867 and for a declaration of his right upon such redemption to bring to sale the property comprised in the mortgage. Held that, inasmuch as M R's interest in the mortgaged property had been limited by the decree of 1879 to the village of Ahak and the share in Khera Buzurg, the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree for the sale of the share purchased by M M A in Surajpur. MUHAMMAD MAHMUD ALI v. In 1882, B brought a suit on his mortgage and obtained a decree, in execution of which the land was brought to sale and purchased by him: C was not a party to this suit. In 1886, B sold the land to D under an instrument, which recited that out of the purchase-money ₹760 were retained by the purchaser for payment of prior incumbrances, and the finding was that the purchaser undertook to pay the debt owing to C. K D, the plaintiff, was the representative of a subsequent mortgagee of the share in Khera Buzurg. K D in 1874 brought the share comprised in his mortgage to sale, and purchased it himself; but without making M R or his representatives parties to his suit for sale. Subsequently, in 1879, M R sued for a decree for sale of all the property mentioned above, but the decree which he obtained was limited to the village Ahak and the share in Khera Buzurg. ## 1. FORM OF DECREE—continued.

The plaintiff obtained a decree in a partition suit in the Subordinate Judge's Court for his share in certain joint family property in the possession of the defendants (his co-parceners). The decree was affirmed on appeal. The defendants filed a second appeal in the High Court; but, before it was decided, one of the defendants died. The plaintiff at the hearing of the second appeal claimed a larger share in the family property than he had been awarded by the decree of the Courts below. Held that he (plaintiff) was entitled to a share in that of the co-parcener who died pendente lite, and that the decree appealed from ought to be varied accordingly. SAKHARAM MAHADEV DANGE v. 117. ———— Suit for partition by a purchaser from a co-sharer.—Decree in such suit need not be for a general partition of the entire estate.—When a purchaser from a co-sharer in a joint family estate sues to have his share severed and given to him, the Court is not bound to force the members of the family into a partition of the whole estate. It is, no doubt, open for each and every co-sharer to ask to have his share divided off and allotted to him (in which case he would have to pay court-fees according to his share). But, in the absence of such a request, the Court is not bound to determine what is the share of each of the co-sharers, and to compel him to take that share by making a general partition. In such a case the High Court refused, in second appeal, to accede to the prayer of some of the co-sharers, who had not appeared in the Court of first instance, to have their shares divided off and allotted to them. MURARAO v. 119. ———— Talukhdari estate—Decree of Privy Council.—In a suit commenced in 1865 by a member of a joint family for the declaration of his rights in a talukhdari estate, partition not being claimed, the order of Her Majesty in Council (1879) directed that the talukhdar should cause and allow the villages forming the talukhdari estate and the proceeds thereof to be managed and applied according to the trust declared in favour of the family. The plaintiff in that suit afterwards obtained entry of his name as a co-sharer in the villages in the register kept under Act XVII of 1876, s. 56; and then brought the first of the present suits for his share upon partition, both in that estate as it stood in 1865, and also with the addition of villages since acquired out of profits, claiming an account against the talukhdari. The latter alleged, among other defences, that the talukhdari estate was impartible, and brought a cross-suit to establish this, and also that it was held by him according to the rule of primogeniture, the right of other members of the family being only to the profits. Held that, in regard to the order of Her Majesty above mentioned, which was applicable to an estate held subject to the law of the Mitakshara, the talukhdari estate could not be declared to be impartible; also that a declaration in the Judicial Commissioner's decree that a member of the family entitled to a share upon partition should hold it as an under-proprietor under the talukhdar could not be allowed to stand. PINTHI PAL v. A house, which was part of the family property, was sold in execution, and was purchased by the defendant himself. The plaintiff sued to have the sale set aside and to recover his half share in the house. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to be put into possession of the whole house, the defendant being left to his remedy by a suit for partition. The plaintiff, however, having claimed only the restoration of his half share, the decree was limited accordingly. Held also that it was not competent for the Court in this suit to go into the question whether the mortgage by G was binding on the minor plaintiff. MARUTI NARAYAN v. At the sale Y became the purchaser; and subsequently, and without having himself entered into possession, Y assigned his interest in the purchase to G. G claimed to be put into possession, and obtained a Court's order, directing that possession should be given to him. The applicant, however, obstructed the execution of the said order, and applied to the High Court to declare G not entitled to the possession he sought. No division of the property in question, by metes or bounds or otherwise, between the members of the undivided family had ever been made, nor had the judgment-debtor ever had separate occupancy of any definite share of the same. Held that G's proper remedy was by a suit for partition, and that he could not claim to be put into joint possession with the applicant and the other members of the undivided Hindu family, of the family property. BALAJI ANANT RAJADIKSHA v. This alienation was not shown to have been made for purpose recognized by Hindu law. Held that the District Munsif, in disallowing the plaintiff's claim to immediate possession, should not have provided for the re-assignment of the estate from E to D for D's life, but that he was right in declaring that after D's death the property should revert to the plaintiffs as heirs of C. PERIYA GAUNDAN v. After A's death, his widow adopted C on condition that she was to remain in absolute possession and enjoyment for her life, and that C was to succeed to the estate after her death. The widow mortgaged 9 out of the 12 thikans sold one, and granted a perpetual lease of another to the defendant. The defendant also purchased B's share in the thikans in dispute. The plaintiff purchased C's rights, and on the widow's death sued to set aside her alienations and to obtain joint possession with the defendant of sufficient as to the former, but not the latter right. —In cross-suits between the owners of adjoining estates, each claimed, against the other, to be entitled to, and to be put into possession of, property situate on the boundary between their estates. The High Court dismissed both claims on the ground that the evidence of the exclusive right of either party was insufficient. Held that, although this might be so, there was, nevertheless, sufficient evidence of possession having been held by both the one and the other, and of the title of both, to support the conclusion that each had a claim to an equal moiety, to which each should be declared entitled. Each should be put into possession of the moiety which was opposite to and adjoined his estate. KHAGENDRA NARAIN CHOWDEY v. MATANGINI DEBI

The sub-lessees made default in payment of rent. R L distrained their crops. Thereupon the original lessors intervened, claiming the crops as theirs. The question of the distraint having been decided by the Court of revenue against him, R L then brought a suit in a Civil Court asking for ejectment of both his lessors and his lessees and to be put into actual possession himself. Held that the plaintiff was precluded by reason of the lease granted by him, the term of which had not expired, from obtaining actual possession, unless the sub-lessees were ejected, which could only be done through the Court of revenue. But the plaintiff was entitled to a decree declaring his title as zur-i-peshgi lessee and putting him into possession of the rents and profits of the holding as zur-i-peshgi lessee; the decree for possession to be executed under s. 264 of the Code of Civil Procedure. SITA RAM v. The mokurari lease having been established as to so much only of the lands as were covered by the title proved, the decree below, although no question of apportionment had been raised, was conditional that the whole rent reserved should be paid. Held that this condition should have been omitted, the amount of rent being determinable by a future proceeding if necessary. IMAMBANDI BEGUM v. other sums for which the defendants should prove themselves entitled to credit, wherever the same might have become payable. The defendants, in their surcharge to the plaintiff's account, claimed credit for various payments made by them to the plaintiff between 25th January 1865 and 5th July 1865. The plaintiff claimed to appropriate these payments in satisfaction of his claim against the defendants prior to 24th January 1865. The commissioner by his construction of the terms of the decree held the plaintiff entitled to make such appropriation. The Judge in the Court of first instance explained his decree to mean that the whole account, prior to 24th January 1865, was wiped out, and directed the commissioner that the plaintiff was not entitled to make the appropriation he claimed. Held that the construction put by the commissioner on the decree was right. It also appeared that on a part of the same land there had formerly stood a thatched building used as a "sitting place" by the residents of the mohulla. The lower Appellate Court, while decreeing the claim, observed that the defendants, if they liked, could construct and use a shed "according to the old state of things" and "without offering obstruction to" the right of the plaintiffs to "use it as a sitting place when necessary." Held that this was not a declaration of a right in the defendants to build, but merely a statement that the decree would not operate as an interference with the rights of the parties to have a similar thatched building set up as had existed in former times. *Official Trustee of Bengal v. (g) ENDOWMENT.

192. ——— Construction of a decree as to the appointment of a manager of the property of a religious institution.—A decree of the High Court declared its holder entitled, as the pandara sannadhi, or religious chief, of an adhinam, to see that a competent person, from among the tambirans who had received initiation at that institution, was appointed to fill the then vacant office of tambiran, managing certain matts. The decree directed that the pandara should name a tambiran of his adhinam for the office, whom, after inquiry as to his fitness, the subordinate Court should appoint. If that Court found him unfit, it was to appoint a tambiran of that adhinam upon its own selection. In execution, the pandara named a tambiran for the office, but died before the inquiry as to his fitness. His successor, as head of the adhinam, petitioned to withdraw the nomination, naming another tambiran. The subordinate Court made an order disallowing the withdrawal, and, after inquiry as to the fitness of the first-named tambiran, appointed him to the office. The High Court, on the pandara's appeal, decided that the first nomination had been competently withdrawn, and directed an inquiry as to the fitness of the person secondly named, finding on the evidence that the first-named was not fit. Held that on the construction of the decree the first nomination could not be withdrawn and a second one substituted before the inquiry, and that the person first named was entitled to the Court's decision as to his fitness. On the facts, the finding of the High Court that the first-named tambiran was unfit was not affirmed, and the order of the Subordinate Judge was maintained. *PONNAMBALA TAMBIRAN v. All parties had proceeded, as far as to the present appeal, on the view that the surviving widow had the widow's estate only. But an order made in the course of the settlement, operations in 1865 had conferred the estate of the deceased on the three widows as well as on his mother, in equal shares of one-fourth each. Held that there was nothing in this order to show an intention to give to the mother and widows anything more than an interest, such as that which a Hindu widow takes; and that the inheritance would devolve in due course of law, an alienation which the widow had made operating only for her lifetime. *MUNNALAL CHAUDRI v. The decree also awarded mesne profits from the date of the institution of the suit. In 1884 the plaintiff sought, in execution of this decree, to recover his share of the profits of the village for the years 1882-83 and 1883-84. Held that the plaintiff could not proceed to enforce his rights under the decree by way of execution. His remedy was by a suit on the right established by the decree. The decree had merely declared the right of the plaintiff to a certain share of produce, and payment was ordered of mesne profits computed according to certain principles. Such an award was not an award of a periodical payment in eternum. The very word "mesne" implied a terminus ad quem as well as à quo, and, in the absence of a special order, the terminus was the date of the decree. VINAYAK AMBIT DESHPANDE v. Possession of the immoveable property to which the decree related was obtained by the decree-holder on the 30th of November 1895. Held that the decree of the Privy Council was to be construed as a decree awarding mesne profits up to the date when possession was obtained and from the date of the institution of the suit. Fakharuddin Mahomed Ahsan v. That decree would rightly have been for a judicial sale (Transfer of Property Act, 1882, s. 58). In this suit brought by the mortgagor for an account to be rendered by the mortgagee, and for re-delivery of possession, alleging that the account would show payment of the debt already made out of the rents and profits,—Held that the decree for possession did not amount to a decree for foreclosure or preclude redemption, the possession of the decree-holder having only been as mortgagee, and having involved liability to account to the mortgagor. *PAPAMMA RAO v. The vendee (defendant) preferred an appeal from this decree, which the Appellate Court, on the vendee's application, struck off on the 18th September 1879. Held that, assuming that the order of the Appellate Court, by reason that it did not award costs to the decree-holder (respondent), might have been made the subject of a second appeal to the High Court, inasmuch as the decree of the 18th February 1879 could not have

The period specified in the decree for the payment of the purchase-money, the day on which the decree was made not being computed, expired on the 11th January following. On the 18th March 1872, an order was passed by the Recorder of Rangoon, which was as follows: "By consent the property subject to the equitable mortgage to be given up to the plaintiff in satisfaction of all claims and demands against the defendant under the decree of the High Court." On the 3rd July 1872 the Recorder directed the defendant to execute within six days a conveyance of the mortgaged property to the plaintiff. On the 11th July 1872 the Recorder declared that, if the conveyance was not executed within twenty-four hours by the defendant, the Court would execute it, and accordingly on the 12th July 1872 the Court executed the conveyance. Held that the Recorder had no power to pass the order of the 18th March 1872, and that the defendant could not be required to execute the conveyance. On the 6th December 1886, the plaintiff discovered that it was out of the defendant's power to specifically perform his contract, and he thereupon, on the 13th April 1887, applied to the Court which had granted the decree for a re-hearing of the suit on the question of damages, asking that, in lieu of the decree for specific performance, a decree for damages, when assessed, might be entered up. Held that he was entitled to ask for such relief. *PEARISUNDARI DASSEE v. 296. ——— Decree in favour of plaintiff—Rectification of decree on application of defendant—Practice—Objection taken at hearing that application made to Court was not the application of which notice had been given to opposite party—Preliminary point.—The plaintiffs sued in 1877 for specific performance of an agreement, dated 27th September 1871, by which certain landed properties were to be divided, as specified in the agreement between them and the defendants. The case came on for hearing on the 13th September 1878. The defendants did not appear, and a decree ex-parte was made, which declared that the plaintiffs were entitled to have the agreement of the 27th September 1871 specifically performed, and referred the suit to the commissioner for the preparation of conveyances, etc. The decree was sealed on the 9th October 1878. No further steps were taken by any of the parties for six years, and in September 1884 the matter was first brought before the commissioner. He then directed the defendants to lodge with him all the title-deeds of the properties which by the agreement were to go to the plaintiffs as their share. The defendants thereupon applied that the plaintiffs should be directed to lodge the title-deeds of the properties which by the agreement were to go to them, but the commissioner refused to make this order, being of opinion that he was not authorized to do so under the decree, which contained no direction to him in respect thereof. The defendants on the 10th November 1884 gave notice to the plaintiffs that they would apply to the Court—(1) "to set aside or vary its order of the 13th September 1878, so far as it related to the lodging of title-deeds, etc.; (2) to appoint a receiver of certain properties mentioned in the agreement; (3) to order the plaintiffs to deliver up to the defendants the properties which belonged to their share under the agreement; (4) to order certain accounts to be taken." This motion was not brought on until the 10th September 1885, on which day it was dismissed with costs; the Judge holding that the defendants had not shown sufficient cause to justify the setting aside of the decree under s. 108 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). The plaintiffs having still kept possession of certain of the properties which by the agreement were to go to the defendants, notice was given by the defendants to the plaintiffs on the 28th April 1887 that they would apply to the Court for an order that the plaintiffs should perform their part of the agreement of the 27th September 1871, so far as it remained unperformed by them, by giving up to the defendants possession of certain properties and by accounting for the rents thereof, etc., etc. At the hearing of this motion, counsel for the defendants asked that the decree should be rectified, by directing that the agreement should be specifically performed by the plaintiffs and defendants respectively. Held that the defendants were entitled to have the decree rectified. The fact that the decree declared that the plaintiffs were entitled to have the agreement of the 27th September 1871 specifically performed implied an order for specific performance of that agreement by all the parties to it. The mandatory words, however, as against the plaintiffs, having been, in the first instance, omitted, might now be inserted in the decree, so as to put the decree into the ordinary and usual form of decree in cases of this nature. The Court has inherent power over its own records so long as those records are within its power, and it can set right any mistake in them. Counsel for the plaintiffs contended that the defendants were not entitled, in the present motion, to ask for a rectification of the decree, inasmuch as their notice of motion did not intimate that the point would be raised. Held that such an objection ought to be taken at once as a preliminary point. As it was not made until the argument of counsel for the defendants was concluded, it should be taken that the form of the motion as made to Court was acquiesced in. The objection was then too late. KARIM MAHOMED v. RAJOOMA . . . I. L. R., 12 Bom., 174

297. ——— Decree for redemption within specified time—Appeal against decree—Power of Court in execution to extend time for redemption allowed by decree—Special ground for enlarging time.—The plaintiffs sued for the redemption of certain mortgaged property. On the 1st March 1886, a decree was passed declaring the plaintiffs entitled to redeem on payment by them to the defendants of R649-11-0 within three months from the date of the decree. Against this decree the defendants (the mortgagees) appealed on the ground that a much larger sum than R649-11-0 was due to them on the mortgage. The plaintiffs also filed objections to this decree under s. 561 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), on the ground that the mortgage-debt had been long ago paid off, and that now a large sum was due to them from the mortgagees, who had been in receipt of the profits of the property. Under these circumstances, the plaintiffs did not pay the R649-11-0 within three months as ordered by the decree. On the 12th October 1886, they presented an application for execution, and paid into Court the R649-11-0. The lower Court granted their application, and ordered

Application to insert in decree an order to pay value of such moveable property in event of failure to deliver—Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), ss. 206-S.—A partition suit brought by a son against his father was referred to arbitration. On the 9th January 1890, the award was published, and on the 27th March 1890 the defendant moved for and obtained a decree in terms of the award. By this decree it was ordered that in satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim the defendant should pay to him Rs. 1,05,000 in the manner therein stated, viz., Rs. 40,000 to be paid forthwith and the balance of Rs. 65,000 to be paid "upon the plaintiff's delivering to the defendant certain specified property, which included two vessels or buglows, called respectively the Nasri and Sambuk." In no event was defendant to be required to pay the Rs. 65,000 before the 15th November 1890. At the date of the decree the vessel Sambuk was at sea on a voyage, and on the 18th June 1890, while still on the voyage, she was lost. On the 15th November 1890, the plaintiffs' attorneys demanded payment of the balance of Rs. 65,000. They offered to deliver the other properties specified in the decree, but stated that the vessel Sambuk had been lost. They offered to pay its value, which they estimated at Rs. 1,000. The defendants, however, demanded the delivery of the buglows, which they stated to be worth a very large sum. The defendants having, under the circumstances, refused to pay the Rs. 65,000, the plaintiff applied for execution of the decree, which was refused. He then obtained a rule calling on the defendant to show cause why the decree of the 27th March should not be amended or rectified by stating therein the amount of money to be paid to the defendant as an alternative if delivery of the vessel Sambuk could not be made, such delivery having become impossible. Held that the rule must be discharged. The objection was an objection to an award, not to a decree. Possibly it might have been open to the parties to object to the award before it was filed on the ground that it ought to have stated a sum to be paid to the defendant in case some of the property could not be delivered to him. If such an objection had been made, the Court might possibly have remitted the award or refused to file it. No such objection, however, was taken, and the award was filed and a decree obtained in accordance with the award. The award could not be modified by the Court, nor could the decree, which must be in accordance with the award. AHMED BIN ESSA KHALIFFA v. ESSA BIN KHALIFFA agreement. The plaint set forth the facts and the part payment, and prayed that the defendant might be ordered specifically to perform the agreement and to pay to the plaintiff the balance of the purchase-money, viz., the sum of Rs. 4,475. On the 9th September 1897, judgment was given for the plaintiff ordering "specific performance as prayed and costs." The decree was accordingly drawn up in terms of the prayer of the plaint. It was afterwards discovered that the sum mentioned in the prayer (viz., Rs. 4,475) and inserted in the decree was incorrect, and ought to have been Rs. 4,775, the latter being the real balance due at the rate mentioned in the agreement after deducting the Rs. 1,000 paid as earnest. On 6th November 1897, the plaintiff gave notice of motion to rectify the decree by altering the figure Rs. 4,475 to Rs. 4,775. 309. ——— Effect of a decree obtained by an attaching creditor in a suit against successful intervenors or claimants—Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859), ss. 240, 270, 271.—In 1872 the plaintiff obtained a money-decree against two brothers, P and K. In execution of that decree, he attached their one-half share in certain fields in 1874. The attachment was removed at the instance of two claimants, S and B. In 1875 the plaintiff sued the claimants and obtained a decree in his favour in 1878. Meanwhile, in December 1874, after the plaintiff's attachment had been removed, one V obtained a decree against one of the brothers, P. The defendant preferred an appeal against this decree and the plaintiff preferred an appeal praying for the enlargement of the period fixed, within which he was to become a saanyasi pending the disposal of the appeal preferred by the defendant. The Court accordingly made the following order—It is ordered that the suit be dismissed under s. 370 of the Civil Procedure Code unless the official assignee elects, on or before the fifth day of October next to continue the suit and give security for the defendants' costs. The time for complying with the order was subsequently extended,

When all had attained full age, two having been minors at the testator's death, they effected a separation of their interests derived from the will, and executed to one another instruments of compromise and partition containing words relating to possible claims which they gave up. One of the two younger brothers afterwards died, having taken, under the will of the other younger one, all the estate of the latter, who had died without issue before him. The eldest then attempted to raise the question whether, on the one hand, the brothers had taken under their fathers' will absolute interests, or on the other, interests that were divested, and went over to a surviving brother in the event of death without issue. As to this, the Court below differed, but the Appellate Court decided, and on this appeal the decision was affirmed, that the above instruments relinquished future demands, this claim included, relating to the brothers' estates under their father's will. *GREENDER CHUNDER GHOSE v. In a suit brought by a judgment-creditor of A in 1868 to recover A's half share in the joint property from B and C, the plaintiff gave in evidence proceedings taken by A jointly with his brother B in 1856 against a third person, relating to the joint property with a view to show that the two documents were illusory, and intended to screen A's share from execution by his creditors. exercise that influence and control over such person for his own advantage or benefit, or for the advantage or benefit of some religious object in which he is interested, and will call upon him to give clear and cogent proof that the transaction complained of was such a one as the law would support and recognize. Where a fiduciary or quasi-fiduciary relation had existed, Courts of Equity have invariably placed the burden of sustaining the transaction upon the party benefited by it, requiring him to show that it was of an unobjectionable character and one which it ought not to disturb. The exercise of this beneficial jurisdiction is not confined to cases only between guardian and ward, attorney and client, father and son, but the relief thus granted stands upon a general principle, applying to all variety of relations in which dominion may be exercised by one person over another. The plaintiff, who on the death of the widow of his brother became entitled to the estate of the deceased, found himself resisted in his claim by wealthy relatives. He was a man without means. The defendant took him to his house, kept him there, and found him all the money for the purpose of carrying on his litigation with his relatives, in which the plaintiff succeeded. While the litigation for mutation of names in respect of the property was pending in again shortly after the mutation case had terminated in his favour, he executed a deed of endowment of the remaining half in favour of a temple founded by the ancestor of the defendant, and in which the defendant was interested, and the result was that plaintiff was left as poor as he was when he first came into the defendant's hands. Plaintiff sued for cancellation of the deed of endowment, on the ground that the same had been obtained from him by the exercise of undue influence and by means of fraud, and obtained a decree. On appeal by the defendant it was held that, looking at all the facts, such a

Explanation 4—Words per se defamatory.
Explanation 4 of s. 499 of the Penal Code does not apply where the words used and forming the basis of charge are per se defamatory, though when the meaning of words spoken or written is doubtful, and evidence is necessary to determine the effect of such words and whether they are calculated to harm a particular person's reputation, it is possible that the principle enunciated in the explanation might and would with propriety be applied. QUEEN EMpress v. DEFAMATION—continued.

A suit for defamation can only be brought by the person actually defamed, if the person is sui juris, and if not sui juris, then under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, by his guardian or next friend. *Dawan Singh v. 8. ——— Nature of defamation—Penal Code, s. 499—"Publishing" defamatory matter—Filing petition in Court.—The act of filing in Court a petition containing imputations concerning a person calculated to harm his reputation, with the intention that it should be read by other persons, amounts to making or publishing the imputation within the meaning of s. 499 of the Penal Code. The criminal law of this country with regard to defamation depends on the construction of s. 499 of the Penal Code, and not on what may be the English law on the same subject. GREENE v. As a reason for demanding the production of the plaintiff's ticket, he said to him in the presence of the other passengers, "I suspect you are travelling with a wrong (or false) ticket," which was the defamation complained of. The guard was held to have spoken the above words bona fide. Held the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree for damages. SOUTH INDIAN RAILWAY COMPANY v. RAMAKARISTNA

11. ——— Penal Code, s. 499, excep. 10—Privilege—"Mala fides."—The complainant, a Brahman, who had been put out of caste, was re-admitted by the executive committee of the caste after performing expiatory ceremonies. This re-admission was not approved of by the accused, who formed a faction of the caste; and they, after an interval of six months, distributed in the bazaar to all classes of the public printed papers in which the complainant was described as a doshi or sinner, which signified that he was a person unfit to be associated with. The accused were charged with the offence of defamation. They pleaded privilege, and it was admitted that they had acted without malice. Held that the accused had not acted in good faith, and that the publication was not under the circumstances privileged and protected by Penal Code, s. 499, excep. 10, and that the accused were accordingly guilty of defamation. THIAGARAYA v. 12. ——— Privileged communication—Excommunication from caste—Presumption of bona fides.—Plaintiff was a Hindu widow of the Modh Wania caste. Defendant was the head of the caste. He received anonymous letters imputing bad conduct to the plaintiff. He was requested to call a caste meeting to consider the matter; he did so, and placed the letters before the meeting, and it was then resolved to warn the plaintiff. The warning was, however, unheeded. So a second meeting was called by the defendant. Plaintiff sent her brother and sister's husband to the meeting in order that they might defend her. But they offered no explanation on her behalf. Witnesses were then heard and ten persons selected to decide what should be done. Defendant was one of those ten, and he communicated to the general meeting the decision they had come to—namely, that the plaintiff should be excommunicated. The meeting unanimously adopted this decision, and the defendant announced the decision of the caste to the gor for him to promulgate. The plaintiff thereupon sued to recover from the defendant Rs. 249 as damages for defamation. Held that the defendant was not guilty of defamation. He acted in the matter honestly, and as he was bound to act in the interests of the caste, and in the discharge of his duties as leader of the caste. Per RANADE, J.—The defendant's act was privileged. Plaintiff sued for cancellation of the deed of endowment, on the ground that the same had been obtained from him by the exercise of undue influence and by means of fraud, and obtained a decree. On appeal by the defendant it was held that, looking at all the facts, such a relation between plaintiff and defendant in the course of the year 1885 had been established as to cast upon the latter the obligation of satisfying the Court that the transaction, which was given effect to by the deed of endowment, was an honest bona fide transaction and one that ought to be upheld. SITAL PRASAD v. Thereupon one of those witnesses prosecuted the pleader for defamation. The Magistrate held that there was no justification for the offence, and convicted the pleader, and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs15 under s. 500 of the Penal Code. Held, reversing the conviction and sentence, that in the absence of express malice (which was not to be presumed) the pleader was protected by except. 9 to s. 499 of the Penal Code. Held also that, in considering whether there was good faith (i.e., due care and attention), the position of the person making the imputation must be taken into consideration. In the case of an advocate, where express malice is absent, a Court having due regard to public policy would be extremely cautious before depriving him of the protection of except. 9 to s. 499 of the Penal Code. Semble—S. 499 of the Penal Code should be construed without reference to the English law. IN RE NAGARJI TRIKAMJI . The editor having been convicted by the Magistrate, the Sessions Court on appeal quashed the conviction on the ground that there was no evidence that the editor was the writer of the libel or permitted its publication. Held that, in the absence of proof to the contrary, the declaration was prima facie proof of publication by the editor. Held also that it would be a sufficient answer to the charge if the editor proved that the libel was published in his absence and without his knowledge, and that he had in good faith entrusted the temporary management of the newspaper during his absence to a competent person. RAMASAMI v. Certain petitions said to emanate from the accused were received by Government charging the complainant with bribery and corruption. Government thereupon ordered Mr. Monteath, Collector and Magistrate of the district, to enquire into the matter. Mr. Monteath enforced the attendance of the accused by writing to the police, who brought the accused before him. In answer to questions put to him, the accused denied having sent any petition to Government, but stated that he had paid a bribe to the complainant to secure the acquittal of his son, who was then on his trial on a charge of theft before him. Mr. Monteath examined other witnesses, and reported the result of his enquiry to Government. Government permitted the Deputy Collector to prosecute the accused, and he accordingly lodged a complaint against the accused for defamation under s. 500 of the Penal Code in having stated to Mr. Monteath, in the course of the inquiry, that he (the complainant) had accepted a bribe from him. The trying Magistrate was of opinion that the offence fell under s. 211 of the Penal Code. He at first framed charges both under ss. 211 and 500. But subsequently he struck out the charge of defamation under s. 500, and convicted the accused under s. 211 of making a false charge. On appeal the Joint Sessions Judge was of opinion that the charge under s. 211 could not be maintained, as the accused had not made any "false charge" to a Court or officer having jurisdiction to investigate it. As regards the charge of defamation, he was of opinion that the fact of bribery was not proved. But he held that in making the statement to Mr. Monteath, the accused had acted in good faith, and that his case fell under except. 8 to s. 499 of the Penal Code. He therefore reversed the conviction under s. 211 and acquitted the accused of defamation under s. 500 of the Code. Against this order of acquittal, Government appealed to the High Court. Held that the accused was guilty of defamation. Held also that, in the absence of sanction from Government, the inquiry held by Mr. Monteath, the District Magistrate, was not a "taking cognizance" of the offence. Held further that, as Mr. Monteath was not sitting as a "Court" when he made the inquiry and examined the accused, the accused was not entitled to claim an absolute protection from a charge of defamation as a witness in a judicial proceeding. The accused was only entitled to a qualified privilege depending on the exceptions to s. 499 of the Penal Code. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KARIGOWDA

3. Necessity for plaintiff to prove superior title.—It is essential that a claimant, seeking to oust a party in possession of an estate, should establish his own right to the estate, and not rely upon the failure of the title impeached. A decree of the Sudder Court held that, although the title set up by the plaintiff was wholly bad, yet that a party defendant with whom the plaintiff had, by a deed of compromise, agreed to divide the estate, had shown his title, and on that ground decreed possession against the other defendant. Such the effect of the decree would be (1) to defeat the defendant's possessory title without giving him an opportunity of contesting the title of the party by whom he is turned out of possession, and (2) as it was a violation of legal principles which protect possession and of the substantial principles of justice which regulate the order of parties and union of titles to sue in one suit. I have no title over it, and the inamdar can give it for cultivation to any one he pleases." Shortly after the date of this vazinama, the inamdar gave the land to the plaintiff, who now sued to obtain it from the defendants, who had remained in possession. 2. Suit for management of religious endowment—Right of suit—Act

XX of 1863, s. 18—Parties—Jurisdiction of High Court.—The plaintiffs, describing themselves as the

whom (as they alleged) was vested the management and control of the temple, endowments, and worship of the Degumbery sect of Jains, and who formed the committee for the management of all the Jain charities as well in Calcutta as in all the other towns and places in India, brought a suit, praying, inter alia, for the construction of a will, and for a declaration of their rights thereunder as members of the said Panch, and to have property dedicated by the will to religious purposes ascertained and secured. Held per KES-

NADY, J., in the Court below, that the description of the character in which the plaintiffs sued was uncertain and ambiguous; that, inasmuch as the property in question was not devutter, the plaintiffs were not separats, and all they could claim, therefore, was a right of management; and that a more manager, without some special power which the Hindu law confers on separats, could not institute such a suit;

that the plaintiffs not being a corporation could not sue in a corporate character; that assuming religious endowments had been created by the will, leave to bring the suit should have been obtained under s. 18 of Act XX of 1863; and that, if the quests, possibly the Advocate General could sue.

Held on appeal, reversing the decision of the lower Court, that the right in which the plaintiffs sued was sufficiently shown, and that the object of the suit was not to assert any personal right of ownership in the plaintiffs. Held, further, that the Advocate

General was not a necessary party, although it was desirable that such suits should be brought only with his consent, or by the leave of the Court. Held, further, that suits of this description do not fall under Act

XX of 1863, but come under the ordinary jurisdiction of the Court, inherited from the Supreme Court, and conferred upon that Court by its Charter—a jurisdiction similar in its general features to that of the property was not a public, religious, and charitable trust; that he was not a trustee; that the plaintiffs had no right to sue; and that the suit was time-barred. Held (1) that, having regard to the fact that a certain number of the public had always used the temple, that there was attached to it a dharma-shala, and that the surplus funds not required for the service of the temple were to be applied to feeding travellers and maintaining a sadaya, the intention of the founder was to devote the property to public, religious, and charitable purposes; (2) that although the defendant was not appointed a trustee, yet by taking charge of the endowment, and purporting to manage it as temple property, he made himself a constructive trustee, and was liable as such to the beneficiaries. JUGATKISHORE v. LAKSHMAN DAS RAHUNATH DAS. I. L. R., 23 Bom., 659.

The suit was brought by the trustees of certain pagodas for the recovery of six villages for the defendant on behalf of the pagodas, and to declare a copper sanad, purporting to be an ancient grant on which defendant based his title, a forgery. The District Judge considered that the evidence sufficiently established that the title to the villages was in the temples, and not in the defendant, but he was also of opinion that, as defendant had been lawfully placed in management by the Board of Revenue in 1858, he was entitled to hold the villages for life. He therefore declared plaintiffs' reversionary title as trustees of the temples on the death of the defendant. Defendant appealed from this decision as to the title, and plaintiff appealed as to the part of the decree which restrained him from immediate possession of the property. Held by JAMES, J., that the title to manage must reside in the pagoda if it did not reside in the defendant, that the evidence abundantly negatived the title of the defendant, and that plaintiff was entitled to possess and manage the property as trustee of the temples. Upon the question whether plaintiff was precluded from recovering during the lifetime of defendant, by reason of the order of 1858, placing defendant in possession, —Held that the Government could not create a valid title to more than they themselves possessed; that they had simply taken over the afterwards given it over to defendant; that by so doing they relieved themselves of the trust they had undertaken under Regulation VII of 1817, but did not thereby appoint defendant a manager under Regulation VII of 1817. NALLATHAMBI BATTAR v. NEELAKURARA PILLAI. 7 Mad., 306.

8. Hindu or Mahomedan religious endowment, Alienation or pledge of—Bombay Act II of 1863, s. 8, cl. 3—Common law of the country.—Religious endowments in this country, whether they are Hindu or Mahomedan, are not alienable; though the annual revenues of such endowments, as distinguished from the corpus, may occasionally, when it is necessary to do so in order to raise money for purposes essential to the temple or other institution endowed, but not further or otherwise, be pledged. continued no new law, but merely declared the pre-existing common law of this country. NARAYAN v. CHINTAMAN. I. L. R., 5 Bom., 393.

9. Charity—Family idols—Sale of trust property in execution—Suit by trustees to recover the property—Limitation.—The Hindu law, unlike the English law with respect to charities, makes no distinction between a religious endowment having for its object the worship of a household idol and one which is for the benefit of the general public. In execution of decrees against the plaintiff as the representative of his deceased father and brother, certain lands were sold to the first defendant. The plaintiff sued to recover them, alleging that the former owner of the lands had assigned them to his (the plaintiff's) brother and himself (the plaintiff) and their descendants by a deed of gift to perpetuate the worship of the donor's household idol. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the property. The gift was a valid one, creating a religious endowment under the Hindu law, and that the plaintiffs' suit was not to set aside the sale, but was one by the trustee of the endowment to recover the property to which the limitation of twelve years was applicable. RUPA JAGSHEE v. KRISHNAJI GOVIND. I. L. R., 9 Bom., 169.

10. Charitable endowment—Trust property sold in execution—Rights of heirs of the creator of the trust against execution-purchaser.—A trust-deed of certain property executed by the member of a Hindu family provided that neither he nor his heirs should incur or alienate it, but that in case of necessity his heirs might maintain themselves out of the income while administering the trust of a certain charity. The provisions of the trust were not proved to have been observed by the settlor or his family, and the settlor on one occasion disclaimed the trust. The trust property was attached and sold in execution of personal decrees passed against the settlor and another member of his family. The widow of the latter, after the death of the settlor, sued to recover the land from the execution-purchaser as heir to the settlor. Held the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the land. Rupa Jagshet v. Krishnaji Govind. I. L. R., 9 Bom., 169, distinguished. SVAPNAMA v. COLLECTOR OF TANJORE. I. L. R., 12 Mad., 387.

11. Act XX of 1863, s. 14—Bengal Regulation XIX of 1810—Civil Procedure Code (1882), s. 539—Suit to remove trustees of Hindu religious endowment—Right of representative of founder of trust to nominate trustee.—The Maharsja of B in 1862 assigned certain lands situated in Bengal for the maintenance of a temple at Chauria in the Gorakhpur district, and appointed certain trustees of the endowment. Those trustees dealt with the property in a manner inconsistent with the trust by making alienations thereof as if it were their own private property. In 1893 the representative in title of the original settlor sued in the Court of the District Judge of Gorakhpur to have certain alienations made by the said trustees set aside and the property restored to its original uses, and for the appointment of a new trustee or new trustees in place

Division Bench of High Court.—A Munsif who had been dismissed by an order of the English Committee, consisting of four Judges of the High Court, applied to a Division Bench, consisting of the Chief Justice and Mitter, J., to reconsider his case. The Chief Justice having dismissed his application, while Mitter, J., considered that he was entitled to a rehearing, he appealed under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. The Court considered it unnecessary to enter into the merits of the questions raised, and held that the Munsif having been removed by an order of four Judges forming the English Committee, no Division Bench had any power to reconsider, or review, or set aside, or to order the Judges of the English Committee to reconsider, review, or set aside the decision of the English Committee. 9. Rent paid in kind—Conversion into rent paid in money.—A zamindar may sue to convert rents paid in kind into rents paid in money. The fact of the raiyat having paid in kind for a number of years is no bar to enhancement. THAKOOR PERSHAD v. MAHOMED BAKUR [8 W. R., 170]

10. Assignment of rents to creditor for a term beyond existing lease.—The mere circumstance that the landlord has assigned to a creditor a certain amount of the rents for certain years extending beyond an existing lease, does not prevent him from enhancing the rent after the expiration of the term. ESSEN CHUNDER MANICK v. SEERJOY THAKOOR [Marsh., 435: 2 Hay, 503]

11. Sale of tenure in execution of decree.—Bar to enhancement.—A landlord is not estopped from enhancing rent by the circumstance that he has caused the tenure to be sold under a decree. SURANOMYEE v. ADOLFO CHURN ROY [Marsh., 605]

12. Farmer for a term of years—Absence of stipulation prohibiting enhancement.—A farmer for a term of years is entitled to enhance the rent of raiyats holding under him when there is no condition or stipulation in his lease precluding him from so doing. RUSHTON v. GIRDHARJI TEWARJE [Marsh., 331: 2 Hay, 394]

13. Jaradard—Absence of stipulation prohibiting enhancement.—An jaradard is entitled to enhance the rent of raiyats holding under him where there is no condition or stipulation in his lease precluding him from so doing. DOORGA PRASAD MYTTE v. JOYKARNATH HAZRA [T. L. R., 2 Calo, 474]

14. Dur-jaradard.—A dur-jaradard can enhance the rents of the estate of which he holds the sub-lease. GUNGARAY v. UDOOHAYARAY MYTTE [2 W. R., 158]

15. Auction-purchaser.—An auction-purchaser cannot object a raiyat having a right of occupancy, or enhance his rent, except in the manner prescribed by law. DABAR BHUGGUT v. BEECHUN RAJOO [W. R., 1864, Act X, 111]

16. An auction-purchaser under Act I of 1845 is not entitled to sue to enhance the rent of a tenant, not being a raiyat or cultivator, without his consent. JUGGENDRANATH DOSSIA v. UMA CHURN ROY [7 W. R., 237]

3. Suit to assess land paying no rent.—A suit to assess rent upon land paying no rent at all is not a suit for enhancement of rent. BARODA KANT ROY v. RADHA CHURN ROY [13 W. R., 163]

4. Lakhiraj tenure—Resumption, Necessity of, before enhancement.—A decree in a suit for resumption must be obtained before rent can be recovered against a tenant holding under a lakhiraj tenure. HILL v. KHOWAJ SHRIKH MUNDUL [Marsh., 554: 2 Hay, 663]

5. Hereditary conditional tenure—Resumption, Necessity of, before enhancement—A suit to enhance the rents of a hereditary conditional jaghir. The zamindar must first sue to resume on the ground that the jaghir has been determined by breach of the condition through neglect of the service. NITAMONKE SINGH DEO v. RAMGOPAL SINGH CHOWDHARY [Marsh., 518]

6. Panchukkee lakhiraj lands—Necessity for resumption before enhancement.—A zamindar may sue to enhance panchukkee lakhiraj lands without first suing for their resumption. MAHOMED MYANBOOL HAK v. MAHOMED SYED KHAN [5 W. R., Act X, 62]

7. Tuliabi promutur tenure—Necessity for resumption before enhancement.—A Tuliabi promutur tenure is not a lakhiraj tenure, and it is not necessary for a landlord to bring a suit for its resumption before he can sue for enhancement of its rent. *NITAMONKE SINGH v. 1859, s. 15.—Where a tenure was or has become hereditary and transferable, and the rent has not been changed in the time of the Perpetual Settlement, the tenants (being intermediate between proprietor and raiyats) are protected from enhancement by s. 15, Act X of 1859. Tenants, intermediate between proprietors and raiyats, are subject to the Rent Act, which contemplates under-tenants as distinct from raiyats, and contains provisions relating to both classes. 38. —Raiyats with stipulation prohibiting enhancement.—Agreement made before Act X of 1859.—If a zamindar has come under any valid and binding engagement with the raiyat to the effect that the rent shall not be enhanced during the term of the settlement or during any other term, Act X of 1859 gives him no privilege to set aside that contract. SURU SINGH v. BHOO SINGH

[2 Agrs, 303]

39. —Settlement with Government for higher revenue.—If a raiyat has a right of occupancy, his rate of rent can only be enhanced in the mode prescribed by law; if he has not, his landlord can only claim arrears of rent on the ground of actual agreement, express or implied. Such claim cannot be made at an enhanced rate simply because the landlord has settled with Government at a higher rate of revenue. ROOPUR ROY v. PURDER SINGH

RAY MOHUN GHOSE* . 1 W. R., 367

76. s. 51—Act of 1859.—The "dependent talukdars" mentioned in Regulation VIII of 1793 are actual proprietors, and not talukdars whose taluks have been held under documents granted by proprietors which do not transfer property in the soil. The defendant was, therefore, held not exempt from liability to enhance rent as being one of the latter. SUTPANND GHOSAL v. HURO KISHORE DUTT . 15 W. R., 474

77. Act X of 1859, s. 15.—A dependent taluk created before the Decennial Settlement is protected from enhancement by s. 51, Regulation VIII of 1793, except under the circumstances therein mentioned. In a suit by a zamindar for enhancement, brought after Act X of 1859 came into operation, against the holder at a fixed rent of a dependent taluk, the latter is protected from enhancement by the provisions of s. 15 of that Act, notwithstanding decrees pronounced in previous litigation between the parties declaring the zamindar's right to enhance, and directing that the rent of the taluk should be assessed at pargana rates, if it appear that the rent never has been assessed at pargana rates and never has been enhanced, but has remained unchanged from the time of the Permanent Settlement. Such decrees place the zamindar in no better position than other landlords who, previously to the passing of Act X of 1859, had a good right to enhance, but whose right, not having been exercised from the time of the Permanent Settlement, has been taken away by the Unregistered tenures.—A dependent talukdar, under s. 51 of Regulation VIII of 1793, is not debarred from claiming the benefit of that section because his tenure had not been registered by the zamindar under s. 48 of that law. The onus of proving that a dependent talukdar under s. 51 of the Regulation is liable to enhancement under the provisions of that section must fall on the zamindar. *DOXAMAYER CHOWDHAN v. 79. Persons not personally cultivators.—In a suit for arrears of rent at an enhanced rate against tenants who held a "kamti jote jumma,"—Held that the fact that they did not personally cultivate land, but held a jumma with raiyats under them, could never place them in the position of dependent talukdars, and even if it could, Regulation VIII of 1793, s. 51, could not apply to them, unless they could show that their tenure existed, and was capable of being registered, at the date of the Decennial Settlement. *ESHAN CHUNDER BANERJEE v. [24 W. 80. Nature of tenure.—In a suit for enhancement of rent under Regulation VIII of 1793 the nature of the question whether the rent is fixed or variable, the nature and extent of the proof which the plaintiff (zamindar) is bound to give being different according as the tenure falls within s. 49 or s. 51 of the Regulation. Act I of 1845, s. 26, cl. 4—Jungle land.—The words "such land containing to be used for the purposes specified in the leases" in cl. 4, s. 26, Act I of 1845, do not restrain the effect of a lease for clearing land of jungle solely to such time as jungle remains to be cut on the land, but should be taken to mean that the lease will stand good as long as the land is kept clear of jungle, and not allowed to fall back into its old state. 2. LIABILITY TO ENHANCEMENT—concluded.

116. — Duration of Liability to enhancement. On the 27th June 1866 it was agreed between B, a zamindar, and A, a raiyat, that the latter should pay Rs 20 annually as the rent of his holding, and that for the future no further sum in excess should be demanded or suit brought for enhancement of rent. The settlement of the district where the land in respect of which the agreement was made was situate expired on 1st July 1870. B having subsequently enhanced A's rent to Rs 10, D brought a suit to contest his liability to pay enhanced rent, basing his suit on the agreement of 27th June 1866. The lower Courts held that B was not bound by the agreement after the expiry of the settlement in force at the time of the agreement, and directed D to pay an enhanced rate of rent. In special appeal D's claim was decreed. DEOJEEET C. BHAGWANT. 6 N. W., 373

151. Possession for a long time from older date, etc.—Presumption—Act X of 1859, s. 4.—A plea of holding "for a long time from older date from before" is not inconsistent with a holding from the time of the decennial settlement so as to deprive the defendant of the benefit of the presumption created by s. 4, Act X of 1859, which does not require a specific plea that the tenure was held at a fixed rent at the Permanent Settlement, but only proof of payment for twenty years at a fixed rate in order to raise the legal presumption. *MUNOBY GHOSE v. The talukdars continued to hold the entire property, and paid the rent apportioned by law severally, each of the parties entitled. In 1861, the owner of the two-anna share obtained a decree against the talukdars for enhancement of the rent of his share. In the present suit against the same talukdars, the defendants contended that the rent of their talukh had not been changed for a period of more than twenty years before suit. Held that the "talukh," which was intended by s. 17 of the Rent Act, was the original talukh; and that, if the defendants could show that the rent of that talukh had remained unchanged, either in its original entirety or apportioned as it had been under the batawa, they would be entitled to the benefit of the section; but that the decree in the suit of 1861 had the effect of enhancing the rent payable for the whole talukh, and that the plaintiff could avail herself of that decree, although she was not a party to it. *SARAT SOODHAR DABBA v. 193. Consolidation of jummas.—Act X of 1859, s. 4.—A consolidation of jummas into one tenure does not deprive the raiyat of the benefit of the presumption under s. 4, Act X of 1859, if it can be shown that the rent has not been changed. This principle applies also to jummas which have been derived in part or in whole with the consent of the landlord, and which are subsequently consolidated into one jumma. The presumptions of s. 4 are not restricted to holdings, but refer simply to the fact that land has been held by a raiyat at a rent which has not been changed for twenty years before the commencement of the suit. RAJ KISHORE MOOKERJEE v. HUBERHUT MOOKERJEE. [1 B. L. R., S. N., 8; 10 W. R., 117]

194. Holding created since Decennial Settlement.—He must be entitled to the presumption in respect of the whole tenure as consolidated. If one of the holdings constituting it is shown to have been created since the Decennial Settlement, the presumption cannot be made as to the rest. MOTTA BUKSH v. JODOOMATH SADOO KHAN. [21 W. R., 267]

195. Presumption.—The consolidation of several holdings into one, or the omission of fractions by the settlement officer, cannot deprive a raiyat of the benefit of the presumption under s. 4, Act X of 1859. LURKI MOHNI HADAR v. GURGA GORIND MUNDAL. [W. R., 1864, Act X, 126]

196. Division of holding among heirs.—Reservation of continuity of holding.—The division of a raiyat's holding among his heirs, the continuity of the holding not being destroyed, does not deprive the raiyat of the benefit of the presumption under s. 4, Act X of 1859. In the latter case the defendant of one shareholder will vitiate the tenure of all, and give the landlord a right of enhancement. HITS v. BESHARUT MIER. 1 W. R., 10

197. Division of tenure.—Act X of 1859, s. 4.—Extent of proof necessary.—In order to bring himself within ss. 3 and 4, Act X of 1859, a raiyat need only show that the particular land which is the subject of suit, not the whole tenure of which it may once have formed a part, has been held at an unchanged rent since the Permanent Settlement. It is not necessary that the land should have remained a separate holding. KASHERNATH NUSKIA v. BABA SOODHAR DOSSIA. 10 W. R., 429

217. Contract to pay for excess land after measurement—Notice—Rent Act (Beng. Act VIII of 1869), s. 14.—When a tenant contracts to pay rent at a certain rate for any such land as upon measurement may be found to be in excess of the estimated area, it is not necessary to serve him with notice under s. 14 of the Rent Act before instituting a suit for the rent of any additional land, nor is it necessary that he should be present at the measurement. *DWARAKANATH v. 220. Acquired land—Enhancement of rent after accretion—Notice of enhancement—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 14—Reg. XI of 1825, s. 4, cl. 1.—Before increased rent, on the condition laid down in Reg. XI of 1825, s. 4, cl. 1, on account of the area of land held by a tenant under a permanent tenure having been increased by accretion, can be recovered, a notice must be served upon the tenant under s. 14 of Beng. 222. Suit after permission to hold at old rent—Subsequent to declaration of right to enhance.—In a former suit brought by a ryat against the holder under a temporary jama, extending down to 1271, a decree was passed maintaining the jama's right to enhance. But notwithstanding this decree, the ryat was by express agreement allowed, and in fact continued, to hold at the old rates. On the expiration of the jama, the zamindar entered upon the lands, and after collecting a part of the rents for 1272 gave the plaintiff a part of the estate from 1273, and an assignment of the right to collect the uncollected portion of the rents of 1273. The plaintiff now sues to recover from the defendant the rent for the remainder of 1272 and for 1273 at the enhanced rates decreed to the jama. Held that neither the zamindar nor the plaintiff could recover enhanced rents from the ryat without some notice.

223. Previous decree after notice before Act X of 1859—Suit for subsequent arrears.—Where notice of enhancement was issued according to the law in force before Act X of 1859, and a decree obtained by the zamindar which ascertained the liability of the cultivator to an enhanced rate of rent and awarded arrears at that rate,—Held that a suit by the zamindar for arrears for the years subsequent to the decree at the enhanced rate thereby determined was legal and good without issue of any fresh notice under Act X of 1859, and the effect of the decree ascertaining the liability to enhanced rent still continued, notwithstanding it was not executed and arrears not recovered under it. *MOHAMMAD ALI KHAN v. 4. NOTICE OF ENHANCEMENT—continued.

240. In a suit for enhancement of rent of an intermediate tenancy, a notice to the following effect was held sufficient: "You (defendant) hold a takshahi taluk, the rent of which has always been of a varying nature; you have been called upon to make a settlement with your landlord at the pergunah rates; by the immemorial custom of the pergunah, the holders of such talukhs as yours, after deducting 10 per cent. of the fair jumma for collection charges, and 10 per cent. for mahikana, are bound to pay the residue as rent to the zamindar. You hold so much land which, according to rates paid for similar kinds of land in the same and adjacent villages, ought to pay such and such a gross rental; from this, deducting your 20 per cent. on account of mahikana and collection charges, the remainder (so much) ought to be paid to me as my rent, and you are hereby called upon to pay that amount." JANKOVA v. GHOSH CHANDRA CHOKREHURTY.

241. Omission to state mode of increase of produce or productive powers of land.—A notice of enhancement under the second clause of s. 17, Act X of 1859, is defective if it omits to state that the value of the produce or the productive powers of the land have been increased otherwise than by the agency or at the expense of the tenant himself. SOORJAJI v. HURRI THAKOR.

242. Notice with ground vaguely stated.—A notice based on the first of the grounds in s. 17, Act X of 1859, and specifying lands in adjacent places," was held to be bad. SHIV NARAIN DUTT v. KERALMOONISSA BREGUN.

243. Notice with ground incorrectly stated.—"Surrounding rates"—Act X of 1859, s. 17.—That a tenant is holding at a rent lower than surrounding rates is not a sufficient ground to be specified in a notice of enhancement; the words "surrounding rates" being not tantamount to the ground of enhancement indicated in s. 17, Act X of 1859. BOYDONATH v. RAJMOH DEX.

244. Notice not stating quantity of land.—Excess land.—A notice under s. 13, Act X of 1859, for enhancement of rent upon land held by a tenant in excess of the land for which he pays rent to the zamindar, must state the quantity of land so held in excess. The mere statement of "excess land" is not a sufficient compliance with the provisions of the law. GHOSH CHANDRA GHOSH v. ISWAR CHANDRA MOOKERJEE.

245. Notice stating simply that rates are lower than neighbouring rates—

246. Notice not setting out grounds as in s. 17 of Act X of 1859.—A notice of enhancement which did not set forth grounds of enhancement in the words of s. 17, Act X of 1859, held not a sufficient notice. RAJ SARAN SING v. BHANAN DONAY KANABADZ.

247. Indefinite and uncertain notice.—Notice of enhancement should distinctly set forth the grounds upon which enhancement of rent is sought. Notice of enhancement in the (in the occupation of "that as the rent of the land") is below the rates prevailing in the pergunah and in adjacent places, and as the productive powers of the land and the value of the produce have increased, and as the parties have been cultivated, I am entitled to receive from you Rs 794-8-7-11½ per annum," was held to be indefinite and uncertain; and therefore no suit thereon could be brought for enhancement of rent. Chaya Thakoor* 18 W. R., 532

264. —Informality in notice—Dismissal of suit for want of proper notice—Obiter dicta.—Where a suit for enhancement of rent is dismissed on the ground that no notice was served, any decision in the Court's judgment as regards the mal or lakhyat character of the land must be deemed to be mere obiter. Where it is found in such a suit that the notice did not state that the ryat pays less than ryats of the same class, the informality may be overlooked if there is evidence on the record of the rates of rent payable by such ryat; but if there is no evidence of that nature, the suit must be dismissed. Mothoornath Siroa v. N. M. Moore Deo 13 W. R., 297

265. —Omission to specify among grounds stated those relied on.—The plea of informality of notice on the ground that it contained all the grounds of enhancement allowed by law without specifying any as those relied on was disallowed, inasmuch as the ryat had not shown that he had been prejudiced thereby, or had been in any difficulty as to what he was called upon to answer. *Gopernath Janman v. suit the present plaintiff had sued the defendant for the amount of rent originally fixed in the lease, and the defendant claimed in that suit to have the rent reduced in accordance with the terms of the lease, and a measurement was thereupon made, which showed that the quantity of land held by the defendant was in excess of that named in the lease: that suit was decided in favour of the plaintiff for the rent claimed. It is that the measurement adopted by the Court in the former suit was not, as regards the amount of the excess, binding upon the defendant, and that, even if it were, the fact of such measurement would be no sufficient notice of enhancement to the defendant. *Ekray Muxdur v. (c) SERVICE OF NOTICE.

288. Person to serve notice—Act X of 1859, s. 13.—According to s. 13, Act X of 1859, a notice of enhancement must be served by the zamindar, and not the kamil, as the person to whom the rent is payable; notwithstanding an agreement between the zamindar and the farmer, by which the zamindar reserved to himself the right of serving notices of enhancement. BRODER LAL GHOSH v. MAOKERZIE 8 W. R., Act X, 157.

289. Person to be served—Act X of 1859, s. 18.—According to s. 18, Act X of 1859, a notice of enhancement must be served, not upon the under-tenant or raiyat or his agent, but personally upon the under-tenant or raiyat himself, in or before the month of Chaitro. If it cannot be so personally served, it must be affixed at his usual place of residence in the district in which the land is situated; or if he have no such place of residence, at the mail cutcherry, etc. CHUNDER MOHUN DOSSEN v. DHUNOORHUR 7 W. R., 2.

290. Service of notice on wrong parties.—A suit for arrears of rent at enhanced rates cannot be maintained where the notice had given receipts, even though the parties served with the notice are the representatives of the registered tenant. HURU MOHUN MOOKERJEE v. GOTOR 12 W. R., 265.

291. Registered and unregistered tenants.—When a zamindar has received a suit for twenty-two years from the tenant in possession, notwithstanding that he is not registered in his sherika, it is upon such recognized tenant, and not upon any other party, that his notice of enhancement must be served. *CHUNDER BANERJEE v. 336. Prevailing rate for neighbouring lands—Intention of this portion of clause—The provision for enhancing rent to the rate prevailing for the same class of lands is exceptional, applying to cases in which, from some exceptional causes, a raiyat is holding at an unusually low rate, and is not intended—after the rent has been raised on some raiyats in any place for a special reason—to furnish a means for raising the rents of all the raiyats of the same place to the same rate. Current rate prevailing in village—Act X of 1859, s. 17—In a suit for a kabuli at the rate mentioned on the allegation that that rate was the current rate prevailing in the village, it was held that this assertion may be read as sufficiently indicating that the ground for enhancing the rate was the first ground of s. 17. 339. "Same class" of raiyats—Meaning of "Prevailing rate"—Act X of 1859, s. 17—The words "same class" in s. 17, Act X of 1859, refer to the division of raiyats into two classes, viz., those having, and those not having, rights of occupancy. The words "prevailing rate" in s. 17 mean the rate generally prevalent, or the rate paid by the majority of the raiyats in the neighbourhood. SHADHO SINGH v. RAMANOOBHAI LAL. 9 W. R., 83

340. Standard of enhancement—In the absence of proof of any separate class of raiyats within the general body of occupancy raiyats, the general body of such raiyats must be held to be "the same class of raiyats" to whose standard a raiyat with a right of occupancy may be raised, although some may be more and some less ancient than he. 331. "Adjacent," Meaning of—Act X of 1859, s. 17—Held that the word "adjacent" cannot so narrowly be construed as to confine the enquiry to places bordering on the land, or even lying very near or close to it. TALJA MUT v. COMRAO. 1 Agre, Rev., 61

332. "Places adjacent," Meaning of—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, ss. 17 and 18—Rate of rent—The words "places adjacent" in Bengal Act VIII of 1869, s. 18, cl. 1, cannot be restricted to lands in contact with that to which the rent suite relates. The general rule may be stated to be that the plaintiff is not, on the one hand, restricted to a comparison with lands immediately contiguous, and must not, on the other, pick and choose particular places, but should consider the rates prevailing in all the neighbouring places which are similarly circumstanced. The enhancement need not be to some rate which is actually paid. Where different raiyats holding similar lands with similar advantages in places adjacent pay at different but higher rates for hands of the same description and quality, and the only question is the extent to which the defendant is liable to enhancement, the clause must not be so construed as to deprive a zamindar of his fair rents; but the Court should be guided by a consideration of what is fair and equitable, as provided by s. 5, subject to the limitations prescribed in s. 17. If a generally prevailing rate cannot be found, the currency of the different rates being so nearly equal as to make it impossible to say which is the prevailing rate, the Court is not in error in taking an average. DENA GAZEE v. MOHINER MOHUN DOSS. 21 W. R., 157

333. Varying rates—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 30, cl. (a)—Prevailing rate—In a suit for enhancement of rent under s. 30, cl. (a), where it is found that there is no one prevailing rate and that the raiyats holding land in the village of similar description and with similar advantages pay rent at varying rates, the lowest rate may be taken and the rent of the defendant may be enhanced up to that limit. Act VIII of 1869, s. 18*—In trying a question of enhancement upon the first ground mentioned in s. 18 of the Rent Law, 1869, it is not allowable to a Court to strike an average on the rates of rent proved before it. and zamindar in a fixed ratio. The result of making this presumption would be that the new fair and equitable rent would be the same proportionate of the new produce that the old rent was of the old produce. In all cases, the duration of the intikattah must be taken into consideration as an element affecting the question of fairness and equity.

NORMAN, J.—(1) With respect to the rents of rayats having mere rights of occupancy, a zamindar is not entitled to claim from his rayats such rents as are now paid by the same class of rayats for land of a similar description and with similar advantages in the neighbourhood. (2) If such rents are too low, and the zamindar simply allege that the value of the produce has become increased, otherwise than by the action of the weather or at the expense, of the rayat, he shows an increase in the value of that which primarily belongs to the rayat producer, to a proportion of which alone the zamindar is entitled. It is only necessary to give the zamindar an amount of rent which shall bear the same proportion to the old rent which the present price of the produce does to the former. It must be taken that the old rent was fair and equitable. It is for the zamindar to prove his case, and he must support his evidence, as nearly as he can, to the value of the produce when the rent was fixed. (3) If the rent is and could not, therefore, have created raiyats with hereditary rights of property in the soil. After Regulation V of 1812, they could grant leases at any rate and for any term. By the retrospective effect of s. 2, Regulation VIII of 1819, leases in perpetuity or for terms granted prior to 1812 were rendered valid. In this case it was admitted that the value of the produce had increased otherwise than by the agency or at the expense of the raiyat, and that the notice required by s. 13, Act X of 1859, had been served before the end of Chaitro in the year preceding that for which enhancement was claimed. Upon being served with that notice, the defendant had a right to quit according to s. 19. The statute of Limitation does not give him a right of occupancy under s. 6 by holding for twelve years. But for Act X of 1859, therefore, the defendant (assuming that he was not holding for a fixed term, and that his tenancy commenced since the Permanent Settlement) would have been liable to have his tenancy deter-

After the Permanent Settlement, and before Act X of 1859, a right of occupancy was not acquired by a raiyat merely by holding or cultivating land for a period of twelve years. When that Act created the right, s. 5 declared that raiyats having rights of occupancy should be entitled to hold at fair and equitable rates, thus leaving it to the Court to determine in every case of dispute what is a fair and equitable rate. To be fair and equitable, it must be so as regards both parties. ISHOOR GHOSH v. HILLS

in all cases in which the above presumption arises, and in which an adjustment of rent is requisite in consequence of a rise in the value of the produce caused simply by a rise in price, this method of proportion should be adopted—the former rent should bear to the enhanced rent the same proportion as the former value of the produce of the soil calculated on an average of three or five years next, before the date of the alleged rise in value, bears to its present value, that in all cases in which the above presumption is rebutted by the nature and express terms of the written contract, the readjustment should be formed on exactly the same principle as that on which the original written contract, which is sought to be superseded, was based; and that in cases in which it appears from the express terms of the contract, that the rents then made payable by the tenant were below the ordinary rate paid for similar land in the places adjacent, in consequence of a covenant entered into by the raiyat to cultivate indigo or other crops, the former rent must be corrected so as to represent the ordinary rate current at the period of the contract, before it can be admitted to form a term in the calculation to be made according to the method of proportion above laid down. Per MACPHERSON, J.—The rule of proportion,—as the old value of produce is to the old rent, so is the present value of produce to the rent which ought now to be paid,—is the rule which should be adopted in the absence of any recently-adjusted called upon in any given case to determine the rent which it is fair and equitable that the raiyat should pay, he ought to enquire: 1st Whether at the last antecedent period, when the arrangement between the parties (either then created or previously existing) was such as must, by reason of tacit acquiescence or otherwise, be taken to have been fair and

him, then he must ascertain whether the raiyat is legally entitled by custom, based either on his personal status or on the character of the land occupied by him, to any definite share of the produce of the land or to any beneficial interest in it. If the raiyat is so entitled, the rent must be adjusted accordingly. 3rd.—If neither express agreement nor legal right in the raiyat be found to have determined the amount of rent, the last arrangement must have been governed by some locally prevailing custom, or the rent regulated, tacitly, according to some locally prevailing rates; and in that case the custom ought to be complied with, and the rates adhered to. which the rate claimed for one year 1278 was the old rate and the rate claimed for 1279 was an enhanced rate after notice.—Held that, as the suit was from the beginning essentially a suit to recover arrears of rent due in respect of the years 1278 and 1279, and the question whether the plaintiff had made out a right to be paid rent at an enhanced rate for 1279 was only part of the larger question what was the rate at which rent was due for that year, there was no error in the lower Appellate Court's decreeing arrears of rent for 1279 at the rate which was found to be the true rate, although less than the enhanced rate claimed. Held that the increase of productive power alluded to in s. 18 of the Rent Law as a ground of enhancement must be an agency subsisting and operative at the time when the notice is issued. BRONATHI TEWAREE v. enhancing the rent from Rs. 600 to Rs. 2000. A subsequent suit, in which rent was claimed at Rs. 200, was finally decided in 1862, the compromise being thereby set aside and the liability of the talukh to enhancement finally established. The ameen's report, which fixed the rent payable at Rs. 124, was not, however, made until 1869. In a suit to recover rent at Rs. 124 for the year 1871-72, the Subordinate Judge gave a decree for Rs. 662 15-6, a re-measurement of the talukh having shown a decrease in the amount of culturable land. Held, reversing the decision of the High Court, that the Subordinate Judge was right in making such a decree. SCRAT SOONDARI DEBYA v. 1. STATEMENTS AND PLEADINGS.

1. ——— Proof of estoppel.—Estoppels must be made out clearly. *TWEEDIE v. POONCHUN-
DER GANGOOY* . . . 8 W. R., 125

2. ——— Statement in former suit—
Estoppel in pais—Pleadings—Decision on pleadings.—An estoppel in pais need not be pleaded in order to make it obligatory. With the Indian system of pleading, a party's statement in a judicial proceeding cannot be excluded like allegations in bills in equity and pleadings at common law. But mere statements for the purpose of a particular judicial proceeding can only be conclusive evidence in another proceeding as to such material facts embodied therein as must have been found affirmatively to warrant the judgment of the Court upon the issues joined.
They are then conclusive between the same parties,
not because they are the statements of those parties,
but because, for all purposes of present and prospective litigation, they must be taken as truth. A brought a pauper suit, and virtually denied possession of certain property. B petitioned to dispauper A, alleging that A was possessed of such property.
The Court decided that A was in possession, and rejected her prayer to be allowed to sue as a pauper.
Held in a subsequent suit by A's representative against B's representative for the property that, even if A's allegation, found to be false, could be treated as an estoppel, B's allegation, found to be true, would also be an estoppel; and "estoppel against estoppel setteth the matter at large;" but that, although A's allegation was receivable evidence against A and her representative, they were not concluded by such allegation and the decision thereon. CIVA RAU NANAI

4. ——— Denial of genuineness of mortgage—Subsequent suit to redeem.—
V sued to eject K from certain land, alleging that K, having entered under a lease, held as a trespasser.
K pleaded that he held as mortgagee. It was found that K obtained possession under a mortgage-deed for R1,000, which had not been registered, and that he held also a second mortgage for R50, and it was held on second appeal that K was entitled to defend his possession by virtue of the mortgage for R50, and as V had not offered to redeem the charge, but had sued on false averments, the suit was dismissed. V then sued K to recover the land on payment of R50. In his plaint
V stated that, though the mortgage-deed for R50 was fabricated, the High Court had decided that he was bound to pay R50 before recovering the land from K. The District Court on appeal dismissed the suit on the ground, inter alia, that, as
V denied the genuineness of the mortgage, he could

The defendant in a former suit declared that the land sued for was not family property, but belonged to his sister, and in this suit he claimed the property under her will. The lower Court found that the property was family property, but that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for the whole property on the ground that the disclaimer of the defendant in the former suit amounted to an estoppel and forfeiture of his share. Held that the effect of the defendant's conduct did not operate either as an estoppel or a forfeiture, and that the plaintiff was only entitled to a decree for a moiety of the property. VELLAYAN CHETTY v. A party giving a kabuliat nominally in favour of A is not estopped from pleading that he did not contract with A at all, and that he did not obtain the leased premises from her, but that she knew nothing of the transaction, her name being used merely as a matter of convenience between the lessee and her husband. KEDARNATH CHUCKERBUTTY v. 71. — Agreement not to execute decree—Wrongful execution in breach of agreement—Deed of conditional sale—Defeating claims of third persons—Maxim, "In pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis."—The plaintiff sued in 1875 to recover possession of immoveable property which the defendant had obtained in 1873, in execution of an ex-parte decree dated the 8th June 1861. That decree was founded on a deed purporting to be a deed of conditional sale dated the 24th December 1853 executed by the plaintiff in favour of the defendant. The plaintiff alleged that the deed was executed in order to protect the property against the claims of plaintiff's son, and the plaintiff sought to set it aside on account of defendant's breach of an agreement dated the 16th January 1856, whereby the defendant stipulated that plaintiff's possession should not be disturbed. The defendant, inter alia, pleaded estoppel. Held that plaintiff was not estopped from showing the real truth of the transaction between plaintiff and defendant, and from obtaining relief through the Court against defendant's breach of good faith, because of plaintiff's attempt to hinder or defeat the possible claim of a third party, the maxim "In pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis" not being applicable without qualification to India, where justice, equity, and good conscience require no more than that a party should be precluded from contradicting, to the prejudice of another, an instrument pretending to the solemnity of a deed, when the parties claiming under it or their representatives have been induced to alter their position on the faith of such instrument. PARAM SINGH v. 72. — Benami conveyance—Relation of landlord and tenant.—The plaintiff having sued to obtain possession of certain land which the defendant held as tenant, and in respect of which he had for some years paid rent, the defendant alleged that, prior to the time when he became tenant, the plaintiff had for good consideration conveyed to him the premises leased, together with other property. This conveyance was found to be a mere benami transaction. Held that the plaintiff was not estopped from asserting the tenancy, and under the circumstances was entitled to recover. SABUKTULLA v. HARI . . . 10 C. L. R., 199

73. — Mortgage fraudulently made to defeat execution of decree—Right of mortgagor to sue subsequently to recover possession.—In 1851 T obtained a decree against G, the father of the plaintiff. In order to defeat the execution of that decree, G, in collusion with one B, permitted the latter to obtain a decree based upon an award against him, and to sell the land in execution, at which sale B himself and another person purchased it. In 1857 these purchasers sold the property to V (defendant No. 1). In 1858 T attached the land in execution of his decree, but the attachment was raised on the application of defendants Nos. 1 and 3, who alleged that the property was theirs. In 1876 the plaintiff, who was the son of G, sued the defendants to recover possession. He alleged that the transaction was only ostensibly a sale, but was really a mortgage made by his father to the defendants, and that the defendants held as mortgagees. Two documents were produced (exhibits 19 and 18), dated respectively in the years 1855 and 1862, whereby defendant No. 1 as a mortgagee acknowledged the receipt of two sums of Rs 75 from G. It further appeared that on the faith of exhibit 18 the defendants had been permitted to remain in possession for ten years without disturbance as mortgagees. The subordinate Courts held that the decree, sale, and re-sale of the lands were fraudulent and collusive transactions, and that, G having been a party to the fraud, the plaintiff could not recover the lands from the defendants. On appeal,—Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover; that the defendants, having accepted repayment of Rs 750 as mortgagees, and, as such, having

A document put forward by a third party (H) as a will of the deceased having been set aside by the Courts, an order was passed in a summary suit, under Act XIX of 1841, by which the property was equally divided between the widows. One of them (D) subsequently died, leaving a will disposing of her share to her relatives. Steps were taken during D's life by the other widow (M) and by H to resist the registration of the will; and after D's death M applied for the attachment of D's share and the appointment of a curator. Her application being dismissed, she commenced a regular suit. Held that M's original acquiescence in the title set up by H did not deprive her of any rights which accrued to her as one of the co-heirs of her husband when that claim was decided to be untenable, nor could her alleged alienation of her share bar her present suit. BRUGWANDEEN DOBEY v. was equally barred from 1879: and that the plaintiff was bound by the deed of relinquishment. Assuming the plaintiff was a minor of 15 years of age at the date of the deed of relinquishment, it is not likely he would not have understood its effect, or that he failed to ascertain it when he attained his majority in 1878. His conduct of acquiescence in it had, moreover, acted as a ratification of the contract of relinquishment. VENKATACHALAM v. MAHALAKSHMAMMA [I. L. R., 10 Mad., 272]

S subsequently sued M and A to enforce the mortgage of such property to him by M. Held that, inasmuch as, if S had at any time sued M to enforce such mortgage after he had become the owner of the mortgaged property and before A had purchased it, M would have been estopped from denying the validity of such mortgage, and as there was nothing fraudulent in such mortgage, and A had purchased with a knowledge of the facts, after M had become the owner of such property, A was not liable in such mortgage. *MAHADAJI GOPAL BAKREKAR v. —In certain execution-proceedings land was attached, but before the sale the judgment-debtors, with the permission of the Court, sold the land to the plaintiffs. Previous to this sale, certain persons had come forward in the execution-proceedings, and had claimed the land as having been sold to them by the father of the judgment-debtors: this claim was disallowed in November 1876. In 1881 the plaintiffs, alleging that they had been dispossessed by certain persons, amongst whom were the claimants in the execution-proceedings, brought a suit to recover possession of this land against these persons. This suit was decided against the plaintiffs in the lower Appellate Court, on the ground that they had failed to prove that they had been in possession of the land twelve years before suit. On appeal to the High Court, the plaintiffs, appellants, contended that the claim of the defendants in the execution-proceedings having been rejected, and they not having brought a regular suit within one year from the order of rejection to establish their right to possession, the defendants were prevented by that order from contending that the plaintiffs had not been in possession at the time of that order. Held that the order did not operate as an estoppel against the defendants; and even if it could so operate, it would not do so until the time had run out within which they could have brought a suit to establish their right to possession, and that such time had not expired. GEND LALL TEWARI v. Lorimer, 3 H. L. C., 829. The main question, in determining whether estoppel has been occasioned, is whether the representation has caused the person to whom it has been made to act on the faith of it. The existence of estoppel does not depend on the motive, or on the knowledge of the matter, on the part of the person making the representation. It is not essential that the intention of the person whose declaration, act, or omission has induced another to act, or to abstain from acting, should have been fraudulent, or that he should not have been under a mistake or misapprehension. The word "intentionally" seems to have been used in s. 115 for the purpose of declaring the law as it had been stated to be in judgments in England. On this point, the opinions expressed in the judgments in Ganga Sahai v. Hira Singh, I. L. R., 2 All., 809, and in Vishnu v. Krishnan, I. L. R., 7 Mad., 3, referred to and disaffirmed. A widow had held benami, for her husband during his life, property as to which he had executed a hibanama in her favour. After his death, she mortgaged the property, her son representing her in the transaction. After her death, in a suit between rival purchasers of part of the property comprised in the hibanama and in the mortgage, the plaintiff derived his title from the son, having purchased his inherited share of the estate, while the defendants relied on a purchase at a sale in execution of a decree obtained by the mortgagee. Held that s. 115 of the Evidence Act was applicable. The son had represented that the hiba gave a right to his mother to mortgage, and consequently neither he nor his representative in estate could be allowed to deny the truth of this representation, intentionally made on his part, which also had been acted on by the mortgagee; and it made no difference that the son had not had a fraudulent intention. As a result of the estoppel upon the son, any purchaser of the mortgagee's interest, at a sale regularly carried out, would have acquired a valid title to the property, although such purchaser might have been fully aware of all the circumstances. *SARAT CHUNDER DEY v. 136. ——— Transfer of occupancy-rights with zamindar's consent—Acceptance of rent by zamindar from vendees—Contract Act, ss. 2, 23—Evidence Act, ss. 115, 116.—Under a deed, dated in 1879, the occupancy-tenants of land in a village sold their occupancy-rights, and the zamindars instituted a suit for a declaration that the sale-deed was invalid under s. 9 of Act XVIII of 1873 (the N.-W. P. Rent Act in force in 1879), and for ejectment of the vendees, who had obtained possession of the land. It was found that the zamindars had consented to the sale to the vendees, and received from them arrears of rent due on the holding by the vendors, and had recognized them as tenants. Held by OLDFIELD, J. (whose opinion prevailed), that sales of occupancy-rights were not void under s. 9 of Act XVIII of 1873, when made with the consent of the landlord; that the sale which the zamindars had consented to was valid; and that, under any circumstances, they were estopped by their conduct from bringing a suit to set aside the sale. Per MAHMOOD, J.—That the sale-deed was invalid with reference to the provisions of ss. 2 and 23 of the Contract Act, inasmuch as its object was the transfer of occupancy-rights, which was prohibited by s. 9 of Act XVIII of 1873. Also per MAHMOOD, J.—That s. 115 of the Evidence Act implies that no declaration, act, or omission will amount to an estoppel, unless it has caused the person whom it concerns to alter his position, and to do this he must both believe in the facts stated or suggested by it, and must act upon such belief; that in the present case it could not be said that the vendee was misled by the fact that the zamindars were consenting parties to the sale-deed; that he could not plead

In a suit by the President, on behalf of the Commissioners, brought after the expiry of the year, for a portion of the sum due to them by the defendant.—Held* that, inasmuch as the plaintiff had fully performed all things to be performed on his part and both parties had acted under the agreement, though it was not formally executed by the Commissioners, and as the defendant had had the full benefit of the contract, it would be contrary to equity and good conscience to allow him to set up as ground of defence that there was no contract in point of law. 156. ——— Defence suppressed in former suit—Right to rely on it in subsequent suit.—In a former suit the present defendant sued as owner by right of inheritance to recover the property of her deceased husband, and the present plaintiff resisted that suit on the ground of her preferable right to inherit. Having failed in that suit, plaintiff brought the present suit to recover half the property on the basis of a family agreement made between her and the present defendant's deceased husband. This agreement was designedly suppressed at the period of the former suit. Held that the suit should be dismissed; that plaintiff in the present suit insisted upon a valid family compact varying the ordinary rules of inheritance, having, however, previously appealed to that general rule and designedly kept back the compact upon which she now sought to insist; and that there could be no stronger case of an absolute waiver of that contract and of conduct rendering it wholly inequitable to permit her now to insist upon it. Semble—Where a defendant has been sued by a plaintiff upon his right of ownership, plaintiff's recovery negatives all grounds of defence to that action then existent and within the plaintiff's knowledge. JANAKI AMMAL v. 160. ——— Omission to assert a claim in execution-proceedings—Execution of decree.—Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were sued by a creditor of their undivided grand-uncle D as his legal representatives, and a decree was obtained against them as such. In execution of that decree, the house in dispute was put up for sale and purchased by the plaintiff. After satisfying the decree, the surplus of the sale-proceeds was paid to the defendants, who received it and divided it between themselves. Plaintiff, having been obstructed by the defendants in obtaining possession of the house, brought the present suit to recover possession. The Court of first instance rejected the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the house was the undivided family property of the defendants, and that the plaintiff should bring a partition suit. The plaintiff appealed to the Assistant Judge, who was of opinion that the defendant's omission to set up their title to the property in question at the execution-sale and the acceptance of the surplus of the proceeds of sale estopped them from impeaching the sale and setting up their title. He therefore reversed the lower Court's decree, and awarded the house to the plaintiff. On appeal by the defendants to the High Court,—Held, reversing the decree of the lower Appellate Court, that the defendants were not estopped from setting up their title. Proceedings in execution are in invitum as regards the judgment-debtor, and he is in no way called upon to notice them. It was not suggested that the defendants took any part in the execution-proceedings or stood by so as to induce bidders to suppose that they claimed no interest other than as representatives of the original judgment-debtor, or that their silence misled the bidders at the sale. As to the reception of the residue of the purchase-money after satisfaction of the judgment-debt, it took place after the sale was completed. GURUPADAPA v. IRAPA

165. ——— Compromise of execution of decree.—Execution of compromise as a decree.—Acquiescence.—The parties to a decree for the payment of money altered by agreement such decree as regards the mode of payment and the interest payable. For many years such agreement was executed as a decree, without objection being taken by the judgment debtor. On the 1st March 1878, the holder of such decree applied for execution of such agreement. The judgment-debtor objected that such agreement could not be executed as a decree, and such application should, therefore, be disallowed. Held that such agreement was a decree.

In a suit for foreclosure of the plaintiff's mortgage against E and R, the lower Courts held that A was the true owner, but the lower Appellate Court did not decide whether the plaintiff's mortgage was a valid transaction. Held on second appeal that R acquired the property adversely to A and not as his representative, and that there was no estoppel against him. Dinendranath Sannial v. Ramkumar Ghose, I. L. Held that A and those claiming through him were estopped as against C from setting up that the sale of the house to B was a benami transaction, and that A continued notwithstanding to be the true owner. *RAKHALDASS MODUCK v. 186. ——— Recital in conveyance—Purchaser, Effect of admissions on—Admissions by conduct.—The deed of conveyance of land in Calcutta recited that the vendor was "seised of, or otherwise well entitled" to, the property intended to be sold "for an estate of inheritance in fee-simple," and it purported to convey such an estate. In a suit for dower by the vendor's widow against the heirs of the purchaser,—Held that, although, as between the plaintiff and the defendants, there was no estoppel which could prevent the defendants from proving that the estate sold was other than an estate in fee-simple, yet, as the purchaser bought the property as and for an estate of inheritance and paid for it as such, the recital was prima facie evidence against the purchaser and persons claiming through him, that the estate conveyed was what it purported to be, it being an admission by conduct of parties, which amounted to evidence against them. SARKIES v. PROSONOMOYEE DOSSEE [I. L. R., 6 Calc., 794; 8 C. L. R., 79]

187. ——— Endorsement on deed of conveyance—Authority to convey.—The defendant had received a conveyance of half a certain piece of land from S J (S J having the right to convey only two-fifths of the said land, the remaining two-fifths and one-fifth belonging respectively to a brother and sister of S J). When S J gave the conveyance, it was endorsed by his sister. This endorsement amounted to an estoppel as against her, or any one claiming through her, against saying that S J had not a full right to convey. BLAQUIERE v. RAMPHONE DOSS. . . . . Bourke, O. He did not produce any authority from her, and his

On B, used husband S. In 1881 T filed the present suit on behalf of her adopted son D to set aside the sale and to recover the house. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to have the sale set aside, and to recover possession of the house. The estate was vested in T as legal representative of her deceased husband. Had T wilfully put forward B as the representative of S so as to deceive and mislead M, then, no doubt, she might be held bound by the decree obtained by the latter against B. Her mere quiescence while M wilfully sued the wrong person could not affect her legal rights or deprive her adopted son, the plaintiff D, of his rights. He could not be bound by suit and sale to which he was not a party either in person or by representation. Held also that T was not bound to come forward to assert her ownership when the property was attached and sold under M's decree. The rule—that one who, knowing his own

He was thereupon allowed to intervene in a suit for rent brought by the zamindar and put forward against an ijaradar of lands within the darpani estate. 200. ——— Evidence Act, s. 115—Adoption-purchaser—Representation.—A, a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara law, died on the 12th May 1867, leaving a widow B and a brother R, who was admittedly the next reversioner. In July 1867, B purported to adopt a son D to A, and subsequently in September 1867 obtained a certificate under Act XL of 1858. In 1872 B obtained a loan from the plaintiff M of Rs. 9,000, and to secure its repayment executed as guardian of D a mortgage of seven mouzahs in favour of M. The money was advanced and the mortgage executed at the instigation of R and with his consent, and on his representation that D was the duly adopted son of A, and it was admitted that the money was advanced for, and specifically applied towards the payment of, decrees obtained against A in his lifetime and against his estate after his death. B died in 1878. On the 14th August 1880, M instituted a suit against D upon his mortgage, and in that suit he made S a party defendant, as being a purchaser of the mortgagor's interest in one of the mouzahs included in his mortgage. On the 26th June 1882, M obtained a decree declaring that he was entitled to recover the amount due by sale of the mortgaged mouzahs. In the proceedings taken in execution of that decree, M was opposed by L, who was afterwards held to be a benamidar for S, who claimed that he had, on the 8th November 1880, purchased five out of the seven mouzahs at a sale in execution of certain decrees against R. On the 28th February 1884, L's claim was allowed, and on the 11th August 1884 M brought this suit against L, S, R, and D and the decree-holders in the suit against R for a declaration of his right to follow the mortgaged property in the hands of S. It was found as a fact that the adoption of D was invalid; that the advance by M to B was justified by legal necessity, and that L was the benamidar of S. It also appeared that M had himself become the purchaser of one of the mortgaged mouzahs. The lower Court gave M a decree declaring him to be entitled to recover the full amount of the mortgage-money from the five mouzahs in the hands of S. L and S appealed, and M filed a cross-appeal, alleging the adoption to be valid and binding on S. It was contended that S, as the representative of R, was estopped from denying the validity of D's adoption, and thus, having been a party to M's first suit, the question as to the liability of the mouzahs to satisfy the mortgage lien was res judicata as against him. Held that a purchaser at an execution-sale is not as such the representative of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of s. 115 of the Evidence Act. Held further that, though R was estopped by his conduct from disputing the validity of the adoption or of M's rights as mortgagee, S, being an auction-purchaser, was not bound by R's acts, and was not estopped from disputing the adoption, as he derived his title by operation of law adversely to R, and was thus in a different position from a person claiming under a voluntary alienation. *LALA PARBHU LAL v. 201. ——— Adoption—Suit to establish validity of adoption.—In a suit to establish the validity of an adoption of the plaintiff by the defendant, where it was shown that she had taken him in adoption, brought him up, and married him as the adopted son of her husband, and had put herself forward as his mother,—Held that the defendant was estopped from denying the validity of the plaintiff's adoption, and could not, when the plaintiff might have lost all right in his natural family, assert that she had not validly adopted him. *RAVJI VINAYAKRAV JAGGANNATH SHANKARSETT v. She now sued to release the attachment, alleging the adoption was bad as having been unauthorized. Held that the plaintiff was estopped from raising this contention. KANNAMMAL v. VIRASAMI

GUNGOO MULL* [3 N. W., 66]

191. ——— Disqualification of a brother to share—Intention as evidenced by conduct—Waiver of rights—Hindu law—Inheritance—Mitakshara family.—Between the two surviving brothers of a Mitakshara family, the action of the elder to the younger, who had been born deaf and dumb, was such as to recognize for some years that the latter had a joint interest in the family property. The proper inference to be drawn from this was that the elder treated his brother as a member of the family, and entitled to equal rights until it had become clear that his disqualification would never be removed by his being cured. Their Lordships would not infer that there was an intention shown by the acts of the elder to waive the rights accruing to him in consequence of this disqualification, nor would they hold that his acts operated to create a new title in the younger. *LALA MUDDEN GOPAL LAL v. 195. ——— Adoption made in full belief it is valid—Inducing adopted person from claiming share of inheritance in his natural family.—The rule of estoppel by conduct does not apply where an adoption is made by a person in full belief that the adoption is valid in law, and thereby, and by the subsequent conduct of the adopter, the person adopted is induced to believe that he is entitled to a share of the inheritance in his natural family. 197. ——— Estoppel by acts of ancestor when claiming through him—Taking lease from Government.—In a suit against S and G to recover possession with mesne profits of land of which the plaintiff had been dispossessed by S as lessee of the Government, he claimed the land as part of an estate (M) which belonged to him and his ancestors by the title under which it was held, and had been in their possession very long under that title, and that he had held the property as of right adversely to S for a period which sufficed to give him a title. The lower Court made the Government a party, and finding that the plaintiff's father had repeatedly taken from Government a farm of the villages in question after they had been declared not to be a portion of M, but of a resumed taluk, concluded that the plaintiff was estopped by the failed, the revenue authorities having eventually resolved to leave the question of K's title by adoption to be determined by the Civil Court. In 1884 K filed the present suit against the widows of G for a declaration of his adoption by G and for possession of G's estate in British territory. The widows denied the factum of the adoption, and disputed its validity. They also contended that the suit was barred by limitation. The Agent for Sardars in the Dekkan, who tried the case, dismissed the suit, holding that the plaintiff's adoption by G was not proved, and that the claim was barred by limitation, the widows having been in adverse possession of the property in British territory for more than twelve years. The plaintiff appealed against this decision to the High Court, contending (inter alia) that the widows were estopped by their conduct from denying the plaintiff's adoption. Held that the widows were not estopped. Per BIRDWOOD, J.—The fact that the plaintiff was put forward by the widows as their adopted son in the Baroda territory did not estop them from disputing the plaintiff's allegation that he was adopted by G. Nor was the circumstance that the widows and the plaintiff obtained a joint certificate of heirship to G in British territory conclusive as an estoppel. Per JARDINE, J.—There was now no estoppel (1) because there was nothing to show that the plaintiff had been led to alter his position in life through belief in any misrepresentations made by the widows; and (2) because the widows might have been, under the same mistake of law as the plaintiff, viz., that the Gaekwar's recognition of his adoption created a status operative everywhere, as well in British territory as in the Gaekwar's territory. *KUVERJI v. 211. — Declaration of husband as to wife's ownership of property—Subsequent claim of his heirs.—Where the husband during his lifetime did in every way, both publicly and privately, whenever called upon to make any representation on the subject, always represent that certain immovable property was his wife's, the purchasers from her could not after his death be equitably turned out of property in favour of his heirs. The heirs after his death would be as much bound by the father's misrepresentations as he would have been during his life. LUCHMUN CHUNDER GEER GOSSAIN v. KALLI CHURN SINGH . . . . . 19 W. R., 292

212. — Benami transaction—Misrepresentation—Heir when bound by the acts of ancestor.—B purchased some property from D (a member of a joint Mitakshara family) in the name of his wife K, with the object of concealing from certain persons that he was the real purchaser, and further lest, in the event of a dispute arising in respect of such property, which was heavily encumbered, his exclusive property might be prejudiced and attached with debt. After the death of her husband, K obtained a certificate of guardianship of her infant son S, in which she did not include this property, and in fact continued to treat the property as her own. During S's minority, O, the nephew of D, who was now of age, brought a suit for pre-emption against K in respect of this property, and obtained a consent decree under which he took possession. S then, on attaining majority, instituted a suit against C for the recovery of the property as the heir and representative of his father on the ground that K was a mere benamidar. The defence taken by C, amongst others, was that K was the real owner he believed her to be. Held that on the authority of Luchmun Chunder Geer Gossain v. Kalli Churn Singh, 19 W. R., 292, it was a good defence, for, even on the assumption that the purchase was benami, S as heir of B was bound by the misrepresentation of the latter. CHUNDER COOMAR v. HURBUN SAHAJ person as adopted son—A, a Hindu, died leaving him surviving a mother B and three sisters. A had a brother P, who had been given in adoption to his maternal uncle R. On A's death, his property devolved on his mother B. B mortgaged the property to the defendant. The mortgage-bond was attested by P, who described himself as the adopted son of R. The defendant obtained a decree on the mortgage and himself became the auction purchaser at the execution sale. Thereupon A's sisters sued as reversionary heirs for a declaration that the sale to the defendant was valid only to the extent of B's life-interest in the property sold. The defendant pleaded that P's adoption was invalid that on A's death the property vested in P, and that the plaintiffs had therefore, no interest in the property in dispute. The Court of first instance allowed these pleas, and dismissed the suit. The Appellate Court held that the description in the mortgage bond that P was the adopted son of R, amounted to an admission of the adoption by the defendant (mortgagee) and that he was therefore estopped from contesting the adoption. Held that the defendant was not estopped. The mere fact that P was described in the mortgage bond as B's adopted son was not any evidence of an admission; and even if it were it was not conclusive proof of the adoption (s. 31 of the Evidence Act I of 1872). Held further that the fact treated by the lower Appellate Court as an estoppel had no such effect, as it had not caused or permitted the plaintiffs to believe the adoption to be valid and to act upon such belief. ANANTYANT PATTU SHENVI v. adoption—Treating invalid adoption as effective and subsequently repudiating it—Suit to uphold adoption—A childless Hindu widow, aged 19, agreed with the plaintiff's father to adopt the plaintiff stating that her husband who died at the age of 12 had given her authority to adopt. Subsequently she adopted the plaintiff and had his upanayam performed in the adoptive family next day, and administered his property as the mirror's guardian for about 18 months when she repudiated the adoption and refused to maintain the plaintiff. Held that, the adoption being invalid on the ground that the widow had acted as a fact acted under authority from her husband and she was not estopped from denying the adoption by the fact of her having treated him as effective for the period of 18 months. In order that

206 — Treating adoption as valid for a long period—In a suit to recover possession of certain land to which the plaintiff claimed title as the adopted son of a deceased Wari Brahman it appeared that he had been taken in adoption by the widow of the deceased acting on the authority of her late husband that datta homam was performed subsequently, and that the plaintiff had since been recognized as the adoptive son of the deceased and had acted accordingly during a period of twenty five years. The defendant was in possession under a claim of title as reversionary heir the widow having died shortly before suit. Held on the evidence that the defendant was estopped from denying the validity of the adoption. ANTAPPATTA v. 207 — Mistake of law—Acknowledgment of adoption—Effect of recognition of status of adopted son as to property in Native State on his status as to property in British territory—One G was possessed of considerable property both in British territory and in the territory of the Gaekwar of Baroda. He died in 1858, leaving three childless widows, L, S, and R. Shortly after his death the plaintiff K who was then a minor, was taken to Baroda by L, and on her representations as well as those of her co-widows, he was acknowledged by the Gaekwar as their adopted son and as such entitled to succeed to all the estate and privileges enjoyed by the deceased G. For several years afterwards the widows treated the plaintiff as the legitimate heir and successor of G in respect of the Baroda property. With regard to the estate in British territory, the widows at first put forward K as the adopted son of G. On their application a certificate of heirship was issued under Regulation VIII of 1827, declaring that "the L's were the sale disclosed the existence of the incumbrance now sued upon; that the plaintiff was entitled to assume that intending purchasers would read the notification or search the register for the purpose of ascertaining what was the property being sold; and that his rights were not affected by his not having personally announced his incumbrance, nor could it be said that solely by bidding at the sale he had encouraged the purchaser to buy. *Mackenzie v. Held also that it could not be said that under the circumstances the plaintiff must be taken to have sold in execution of his decree the interest which he held under the bond now in suit; that he could not be compelled to proceed first against those portions of the mortgaged property which had not been sold; and that the bond was enforceable against a purchaser of part of the mortgaged property who had never obtained possession. *BANWARI DAS v. The mortgage lien was not announced in the proclamation of sale as required by s. 287 of Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and the auction-purchaser had no actual knowledge of the mortgage. In a suit brought by the mortgagee against the mortgagors and the auction-purchaser to recover the mortgage-debt by sale of the mortgaged property,—Held that the omission to declare the mortgage at the time of the sale could not be treated as an estoppel. *DHONDO BALKRISHNA KANTKAR v. Both parties claimed the proprietary right and possession, the defendants holding the latter. The first of the decrees in date was the plaintiffs' for money against the representatives of the deceased owner of the property, which before then had been mortgaged to the defendants by his widow. The plaintiffs obtained only the equity of redemption, their purchase having been of the right, title, and interest. The mortgagees, having got a decree upon their mortgage against the widow, purchased at the sale in execution and defended the possession which they obtained. Held that the defendants, in whose favour the decree had been made upon a bond fide mortgage, without notice that the mortgagor had been only holding benami for her husband, had the better

Held that the plaintiff was not bound by the lease, although a long period had elapsed since it was granted, it having appeared that the plaintiff had on a former occasion contended that the lease was a forgery and fraudulent; and as the mortgagee was then entitled to possession under his mortgage, no acquiescence in the lease could be inferred from the mere fact of the mortgagee having remained in possession, it not being alleged that rent was ever paid to the plaintiff. *SUBBAO MANGESHAYA v. On the 20th of March 1877, J P and G P brought to sale in execution of money-decrees against S R two out of those three biswas, which two biswas were purchased by the defendant. The sale was confirmed on the 23rd of April 1877. Out of the proceeds of that sale, Rs. 1,464-14-9 were appropriated by the plaintiff in part satisfaction of his mortgage. On the 16th of April 1877, the plaintiff sued the auction-purchaser for sale of one biswa in satisfaction of his mortgage. Held that, even if it could be shown (which it could not) that the particular biswa mortgaged to the plaintiff was one of those which had passed into the defendant's possession, the plaintiff was estopped by his previous conduct from suing to bring it to sale under his mortgage. *JHINKA v. Evidence was given that he had promised his adoptive mothers to redeem the mortgages, and that he had stood by and allowed the plaintiff to carry out the provisions of the mortgage deeds to his own detriment by paying maintenance to the defendant's adoptive mothers and by paying off certain mortgages which had been created by them previously to the adoption of the defendant. Held that knowledge on the part of the defendant that the plaintiff was carrying out the provisions of the mortgage-deeds, and his allowing the plaintiff to do so, did not estop him from disputing them afterwards, for it was no part of his duty to step in and protect the plaintiff against the consequences of his own unauthorized dealings with his property. SHIDDHESHVAR v. It appeared that in the year 1259 A purchased the dar-patni, and sold it in 1256 to his wife B and son C. Afterwards A successfully resisted a suit for rent brought against him by the present plaintiff as superior landlord on the ground that he had parted with his interest in the estate to B and C. The plaintiff then sued B and C for the rent and obtained a decree, under which the dar-patni was sold to him. He now sued the ijaradar. The intervening defendant contended that A had mortgaged the property to him, and that such proceedings had been taken on the mortgage that he was entitled in the A's right to the rent. Held that the plaintiff could take no better title than A had, as A had directly induced the plaintiff to believe that he had sold the property absolutely to B and C and had led him to bring a suit against them for the rent and under the decree obtained in that suit to purchase their interest in the property, the intervening defendant could not set up a claim to the rent in the present suit as against the plaintiff. AUNATH NATH DEB v. The defendant set up a mortgage of the land alleged to have been executed to the defendant by the plaintiff's mother in the plaintiff's name during his minority. Both the lower Courts found that the land was the plaintiff's kulkarni vatan land; that it had been mortgaged by the plaintiff's mother to the defendant for good consideration; and that the mortgage was binding on the plaintiff. On appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court,—Held, confirming the decree of the lower Court, that the plaintiff was estopped from denying his title to mortgage the field. The general rule being that the grantor cannot dispute with his grantee his right to alienate the land to him, the circumstances of the case did not justify a departure from the rule. The plaintiff, although an hereditary public officer, was not a trustee for the purposes of the Vatan Act, and it could not be presumed that the grantee knew that the plaintiff's guardian had not obtained the previous sanction of Government to the mortgage. He then sued to recover what he alleged was an excess charge of Rs 5 in respect of the tax for 1891. His claim was rejected on the ground that he was estopped from recovering the alleged excess by reason of his having paid the tax for 1890 without protest. Held that the suit was not barred. being at most corroborative evidence, the mere general statement of the banker to the effect that his books were correctly kept is not sufficient to discharge the burden of proof that lies upon him ; particularly if he has the means of producing much better evidence. In a suit to recover moneys unaccounted for, where defendants plead payments endorsed on documents, and the endorsements purport to have been signed by the plaintiffs, the formal and regular method of proof is to call on the plaintiffs to admit or deny their signatures, and then to call upon witnesses to state whether they saw the plaintiffs sign or could speak to the handwriting or generally what took place. GUNGA PERSHAD v.INDERJIT SINGH . . . . . 23 W. 38. ——— Bankers' account books—Suit against representatives of customer for balance of account.—In an action by bankers against the representatives of a deceased customer to recover a balance of an account alleged to be due to the plaintiff by the deceased at the time of his death, the production of the bankers' books, with the entries of the items constituting the demand, kept according to the established custom of mahajuns in India, is not of itself sufficient evidence to establish such a claim, strict proof of the debt being required. *RAI SRI KISHEN v. 39. ——— Suit for balance of unadjusted account.—In a suit for a sum of money on an unadjusted account, plaintiff filed a memorandum (A) with her plaint, from which the amount claimed in the plaint could not be made out. In her examination by the Court the plaintiff put in another memorandum (C) to explain memorandum (A). Defendant admitted that memorandum (C) was signed by him. It had reference to a period immediately preceding that for which the suit was brought. Held that memorandum (C) was rather evidence to support the originally stated cause of action, than an amendment of the claim or the substitution of one claim or cause of action for another. The case was one which should have been decided not merely on the discrepancy between the two statements made by plaintiff, but on the whole of the evidence. The mere omission of an accountable party, framing his own account, to carry forward into a new account a balance against himself existing in a former one can constitute no evidence in his own favour. parties in the subsequent suit were not parties to the previous suits. EASWARA DOSS v. PUNGAYANA-CHAH . . . . . I. L. R., 13 Mad., 361

90. ————— Rent suit.—Decree obtained ex-parte against registered tenant.—In a suit for rent the plaintiff claimed that he was entitled to payment both in cash and kind, and, in order to show that he was entitled to recover rent in kind, tendered two ex-parte decrees obtained by his predecessor against the persons registered as tenants of the tenure at the time the decrees were obtained, such decrees being for rent both in cash and kind. It appeared that the defendant was the owner of the tenure at the time the two decrees were passed, having acquired the tenure by foreclosure, although he had not registered the transfer in the plaintiff's books, and that he was not made a party to the suits in which the decree was passed. Held that, as the defendant was not a party to the suits in which the decrees were obtained, and did not claim through the parties against whom they were passed, they were not admissible in the suit as evidence against him. The decision in Sham Chand Koondoo v. Brojonath Pal Chowdhry, 12 B. L. R., 484: 21 W. R., 94, does not lay down that a decree against a registered tenant is to be evidence for ever in future proceedings against an unregistered transferee not a party to it; but all that case decides is, that for the purpose of satisfying that particular decree an unregistered transferee is bound by it, whether he was a party to the suit or not, the tenure being liable for the rent. RAM NABAIN RAI v. The lower Appellate Court found for the defendants on the basis of a decree dismissing a suit by W's representatives to have the property declared to be W's. Held that the decree could not bind the plaintiffs who were not parties to it. GOLUCKMONER DEBIA v. RAMMONER BOSE . . . . . 12 W. R., 21

87. ————— Evidence of possession—Admissibility in evidence of decree in former suit.—The plaintiffs, as purchasers of a share of an estate, sued to recover their share of the rent of certain tenures held in that estate by the defendants. The defendants denied being in possession as alleged. Another co-sharer in the same estate had previously brought a suit against the same defendants for the rent of the tenures, and in that suit the present plaintiffs and other co-sharers of the estate were made co-defendants, and the decision in that suit was that the present defendants were in possession and were liable to pay to the then plaintiff his share of the rent. Held (MITTER, J., dissenting) that the decree in the former suit was not admissible as evidence in the present suit. SURENDER NATH PAL CHOWDHRY v. BROJO NATH PAL CHOWDHRY [I. L. The defendants claimed these plots as lakhiraj. The plaintiff put in evidence certain decrees in respect of such plots in which it was held, against the persons in possession at the time, that the lands were mal. Held that, having regard to the circumstances and the particular defence set up, that the decrees were admissible in evidence, not as showing that the lands were mal or lakhiraj, but as showing that rent had been successfully claimed in respect of the lands. HIRA LAL PAL v. 90. ————— Rent suit—Decree obtained ex-parte against registered tenant.—In a suit for rent the plaintiff claimed that he was entitled to payment both in cash and kind, and, in order to show that he was entitled to recover rent in kind, tendered two ex-parte decrees obtained by his predecessor against the persons registered as tenants of the tenure at the time the decrees were obtained, such decrees being for rent both in cash and kind. It appeared that the defendant was the owner of the tenure at the time the two decrees were passed, having acquired the tenure by foreclosure, although he had not registered the transfer in the plaintiff's books, and that he was not made a party to the suits in which the decree was passed. Held that, as the defendant was not a party to the suits in which the decrees were obtained, and did not claim through the parties against whom they were passed, they were not admissible in the suit as evidence against him. The decision in Sham Chand Koondoo v. Brajonath Pal Chowdhry, 12 B. L. R., 484: 21 W. R., 94, does not lay down that a decree against a registered tenant is to be evidence for ever in future proceedings against an unregistered transferee not a party to it; but all that case decides is, that for the purpose of satisfying that particular decree an unregistered transferee is bound by it, whether he was a party to the suit or not, the tenure being liable for the rent. RAM NARAIN RAI v. Certain decrees obtained by the zamindar against other tenants in the same pergunnah in suits in which 18 inches had been taken as the hath were tendered in evidence in support of the plaintiff's contention that the customary hath in the pergunnah was one of 18 inches. Held that such decrees were admissible in evidence under the provisions of s. 13 of the Evidence Act, as they furnished evidence of particular instances in which a custom was claimed. JIANUTULLAH SIRDAR v. Defendant's case was that he was purchaser for valuable consideration from the original judgment-debtor. The lower Appellate Court set aside this plea on the ground that the High Court had declared in special appeal, in a previous litigation between defendant and another party, that the purchase in question was spurious, null, and void. Held that the decision of the High Court, though not binding and final evidence against the defendant in this suit, was sufficient to give plaintiff a prima facie case which, by the rules of pleading, it was for defendant to rebut. ABDOOL KAREEM v. 108. ————— Evidence Act, ss. 11, 13, and 40—Admissibility of such judgment.—The plaintiff sued to recover arrears of rent for a certain shop, alleging the annual rent to be Rs 250. The defendant contended that it was only Rs 60. The defendant and the plaintiff's brother were partners in business, and the plaintiff relied upon the evidence of his brother and on two entries in the firm's books in the writing of his brother. To prove the bond fides of the entries, the plaintiff tendered in evidence a judgment passed against the defendant in a suit brought by the defendant against the plaintiff's brother, charging him with having improperly debited their firm with Rs 250 as the rent of the shop. Held that the judgment was not admissible as evidence against the defendant in the present suit. Naranji Bhikabhai v. there were discrepancies as to the boundary lines. There were also differences between the thak and the state of the locality as existing when, for the purposes of this suit, a local investigation was made by an ameen appointed by the Court of first instance. Held that it was not a necessary part of the claimants' cases that there should be a complete agreement between the above maps or that the thak should be shown to accurately represent the former plots. To ascertain the precise boundaries would require more accuracy than could be well expected in a thak map; and the identity of the sites of the reformed plots with those of the plots formerly existing had, in the judgment of their Lordships, been established by evidence reasonably sufficient. *MON-MOHINI DEBI v. 162. Boundary disputes—Conduct of parties—In a boundary dispute, where the question relates to the situation of the pillars which formed the line, and the sketch map left by the officer who laid down the pillars affords room for ambiguity as to the direction of the line, it is of importance to see what has been the conduct of the parties since the line of pillars was decreed to be the boundary. If there has been a Government survey, the survey map must be taken as evidence, and if one of the parties has made a settlement according to the survey boundary, the fact must be taken into account unless explained away. s. 6, sch. A—Copy of entry in register—Evidence.—A husband and wife, Mahomedans, registered their marriage under Bengal Act I of 1876, setting out in the form prescribed in sch. A to the Act as "a special condition" that the wife under certain circumstances therein set out might divorce her husband. These circumstances occurred, and the wife divorced her husband. Held in a suit by the husband for restitution of conjugal rights that the "special condition" was a matter which, under the provisions of the Act, it was the duty of the Mahomedan Registrar to enter in the register, and therefore a copy of the entry in the register was legal evidence of the facts therein contained. *KHADEM ALI v. The plaintiff shipped certain goods in one of defendant's steamers in packages which, though in fact insufficient, were packages of the kind ordinarily used for the conveyance of such goods from Hongkong to Bombay. In an action brought to recover damages for injury to the packages.—Held that evidence of mercantile usage or custom would be admissible to show that the words "insufficiency of package" should not be taken in their ordinary sense, but as meaning insufficient according to a special custom of the China trade. *PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL STEAM NAVIGATION CO. v. It consisted of two parts, in one of which the joint properties of the plaintiff's vendor and the defendant were set out, and in the other the properties belonging to the defendant alone mentioned. In a suit by the plaintiff for some lands as being the joint property of his vendors and the defendant, the defendant put in the road-cess return in order to disprove plaintiff's allegation, by showing that the lands were included in the second part. The lower Court had relied on this return. It was contended in appeal that it was inadmissible under s. 95 of the Road Cess Act, being evidence in favour of the principal defendant. Held that the road-cess return was evidence against the plaintiff claiming through his vendor, and it is none the less evidence merely because, by admitting it as evidence against the plaintiff, it becomes evidence in favour of the defendant. *BENI MADHAB DANDAPAT v. sued to recover damages for the non-acceptance of wheat which the defendant on the 16th May 1889, by two contracts, agreed to purchase. At the hearing, in order to prove the terms of the contracts, the plaintiffs tendered two notes or memoranda of the contracts which purported to be signed by the broker and also by the defendant. These notes were in fact the sold notes which the broker had given to the plaintiffs. Each of those notes had been stamped with an anna stamp, but the stamp on one of them had not been cancelled at all, and the stamp on the other was without any mark of cancellation except a small part of the first letter of the defendant's signature, consisting of a slightly curved line. On these notes being tendered in evidence, it was objected that they were inadmissible, being unstamped, having regard to ss. 11 and 34 of the Stamp Act, I of 1879. The Court allowed the objection and rejected the notes. The plaintiffs then sought to prove the contracts by oral evidence, contending that the sold notes did not themselves constitute the contracts, but were only memoranda of parol contracts prepared by the broker for the information of the parties. Held that the terms of the contracts were reduced to writing, and no evidence, except the documents themselves, could be given in proof of them—s. 91 of the Evidence Act, I of 1872. RATHI v. In July 1879 B sued on the instrument for the balance of the first instalment, but the Court held it was a promissory note, and, as it was unstamped, refused to receive it in evidence. B thereupon withdrew his suit with liberty to bring a fresh one. The note recited that the defendant had received the amount, and would repay it after three months from the date of its execution. The defendant admitted, by his written statement, execution of the note and the receipt of Rs 37 in the shape of paddy, but alleged that he had paid off the debt. He also contended that the note, being unstamped, could not be admitted in evidence. The plaintiff contended that the note was a bond, and could be admitted on payment of the stamp duty and the penalty, under s. 34 of the Stamp Act I of 1879, which he offered to pay. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the note in that the right to this indemnity related to a future revenue settlement, nor had it been decided that the agreement was to run with the land so as to bind others, under whatever title they might be in possession. In the suit in which that judgment was given, the ikrarnama not having been produced, the Court of first instance would not admit secondary evidence of its contents. On appeal, inspection of the document having been offered to, and declined by, the Appellate Court, secondary evidence was admitted. On this appeal, the error was pointed out of allowing the plaintiff to give secondary evidence of the contents of a document, the original of which was in his custody, without the Court's looking at the document.

officer the witnesses deposed to the absconder having been one of the participators in the crime charged against the prisoners then under trial. In the Sessions Court the Judge did not record that the sixth accused person had absconded, and the evidence was recorded against the prisoners then under trial only. In 1886 the absconder was apprehended and tried before the Court of Session upon the charge of murder. At that time most of the former witnesses were dead, and the Sessions Judge, referring to s. 33 of the Evidence Act, admitted in evidence against the prisoner the depositions given in 1874 before both the Magistrate and the Sessions Court. He also admitted the deposition of a surviving witness which had been given in 1874 before the Sessions Court. This witness now also gave evidence against the prisoner. Held that the depositions were not admissible in evidence under s. 33 of the Evidence Act, the prisoner not having been a party to the former proceedings and not having then had an opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses. Held, however, that under the circumstances the depositions given in 1874 before the committing Magistrate, though not those given in the Court of Session, were admissible in evidence under s. 512 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Per STRAIGHT, J., that under the special circumstances the deposition taken in 1874 of the surviving witness was admissible under s. 157 of the Evidence Act as corroboration of her evidence given at the trial of the prisoner. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. was taken and attested in accused's presence—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 80.—Although all depositions of witnesses in criminal cases should be taken and attested in the presence of the accused, and a few apt words should be used on the face of the deposition to make it apparent that this has been done, there is no provision of the law which makes the attestation of the deposition by the Court in the presence of the accused obligatory. S. 80 of the Evidence Act, therefore, does not warrant the presumption that the deposition of a medical witness taken by a committing Magistrate has been taken and attested in the accused's presence, so as to make such deposition admissible in evidence at the trial before the Court of Session under s. 509 of the Criminal Procedure Code. *Queen-Empress v. The "conduct" made relevant by s. 8 is conduct which is directly and immediately influenced by a fact in issue or relevant fact, and it does not include actions resulting from some intermediate cause, such as questions or suggestions by other persons. Per MAHMOOD, J., that the word "conduct" as used in s. 8 does not mean only such conduct as is directly and immediately influenced by a fact in issue or relevant fact; that the sign made by the deceased were the conduct of "a person an offence against whom was the subject of any proceeding" and were relevant as such under s. 8, and that the questions put to her were admissible in evidence either under explanation 2 of the same section or under s. 9 by way of an explanation of the meaning of the signs. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. There was some evidence that B had said her husband was dead a few days after his disappearance; and some bones, a skull and some cloths were found in a neighbouring burying ground which were identified as those of C. B made a statement, recorded on June 4th by the village Munsif, to the effect that she had lured C into a garden, and that A, who was her paramour, had murdered him in her arms, which statement she repeated frequently with greater detail in answer to questions from the committing Magistrate, and subsequently before the Sessions Court. On her appeal to the High Court, after she had been sentenced to death, she retracted her former statements and made the usual charges of ill-treatment against the police. A made a statement to the committing Magistrate, which he subsequently repudiated before the Sessions Court, to the effect that he had assisted in disposing of the corpse of C at the request of his brother-in-law, who corroborated the statement in two depositions before the Magistrate, which were likewise repudiated by the deponent before the Sessions Court. ## 15. NATIVE SEALS

104. — Comparison of native seals—Evidence Act, 1855 s 48—S. 48, Act II of 1855, is applicable to criminal trials. The test of comparison of native seals is at best but a fallible one, and must always be received with extreme caution. QUEEN v. AMANULLAH MOLLAH 6 W. R., Cr., 5

16 NOTES OF INQUIRY

105. — Notes on inquiry by registering officer—The notes of an inquiry held before a registering officer are not admissible as evidence of what the prisoner said on that occasion. QUEEN v. PURNANUND BARICK 11 W. R., Cr., 18

17 POLICE EVIDENCE DIARIES, PAPERS, AND REPORTS

106. — Evidence of police officer—Act II of 1855, s 31—The practice of not examining a police officer who investigates a case condemned. The statements made to him might be proved by him in the witness box, and would be admissible to corroborate the evidence of other witnesses on the same point given in Court before the Magistrate and Sessions Judge under s 31, Act II of 1855. QUEEN v. AHMED ALLEY 11 W. R., Cr., 25

107. — Statement of constable of police.—Where the accused was charged with attempting to murder her child, the chief constable's statement (he having gone to search the house of the accused) that he "had information that the accused was about to kill the child," was most improperly admitted as evidence against the accused. REG v. CHIMA 8 Bom., Cr., 164

108. — Police diaries—Corroborative evidence—Under s 154, Code of Criminal Procedure, police diaries cannot be admitted as corroborative evidence. QUEEN v. THAKOOR CHUND SURMA [13 W. R., Cr., 22]

109. — Corroborative evidence—Police diaries cannot be legally used as substantive evidence or read to the jury. QUEEN v. HUBDUT SURMA 8 W. R., Cr., 68

110. — Use of portions

Criminal Procedure does not bar the admission of other portions of the diary as explaining the portions so used. QUEEN v. NAROKRISTO GHOSH [8 W. R., Cr., 87]

111. — Police papers—Judicial notice—Police papers ought not to be taken judicial notice of as evidence, nor consulted in order to test evidence. QUEEN v. BOSSIRUDDI [8 W. R., Cr., 35]

112. — Police reports—Police reports—Police reports are not evidence, except against the officer. GOVERNMENT v. MUDUN DASS 10 personating N. When the document was presented, a witness was called to prove the identity of the thumb mark of the person, who alleged that he was the executant of the document, taken at the Registra-

2. EXPLAINING WRITTEN INSTRUMENTS AND INTENTION OF PARTIES.

17. ———— Proof of existence of mortgage.—Where a question arises (not between mortgagor and mortgagee) as to the previous existence or non-existence of a particular mortgage, the oral evidence of the mortgagee that it did exist will be sufficient to prove the fact, without the production of the mortgage-deed. AMJAD ALI v. MONIRAM KOLITA

18. ———— Evidence that bond was executed in different capacity from what appears.—It is competent to a party to show that a bond executed in favour of A was really in favour of B, and that A was a party to it merely in the capacity of gomastah of B. SUHOODERA v. RAM RUTTON TEWAREE. Marsh., 3:1 Hay, 24

19. ———— Benami purchase—Hindus.—As between Hindus, oral evidence is admissible to show that land nominally purchased for A and conveyed to him by an instrument in writing was really purchased for A, B, and C. PALANYAPPA CHETTI v. ARUMUGAM CHETTI. . . . . 2 Mad., 26

20. ———— Explaining use of benami name.—Parol evidence is admissible to show that the name of the party used in a deed was only benami for another person. TARA MONEE DEBIA v. SHIBNATH TULAPATTUR. . . . . 6 W. R., 131

21. ———— Explaining terms of document.—Oral evidence may be submitted to explain a document, but not to vary the terms thereof when such terms are in themselves clear and undoubted. RAMBUDDUN SINGH v. SREE KOONWAR

CHUNDER NATH DEB v. GANGA GOBIND SINGH ROY. . . . . 1 W. R., 94

MOHUN LALL ROY v. UNNOPOORNA DOSSEE
[9 W. R., 566]

22. ———— Patent ambiguity—Intention of parties.—Extrinsic evidence may be received to identify the thing referred to in a written agreement. Where there is a written agreement to deliver a quantity of grain (gulla) at a particular time, parol evidence is admissible under certain limitations to show what kind of grain the contracting parties had in their contemplation at the time the contract was made. VALLA BIN HATAJI v. SIDOJI BIN KONDAJI

[5 Bom., A. C., 87]

23. ———— Latent ambiguity—Altering written contract.—Extrinsic evidence is not admissible to alter a written contract or to show that its meaning is different from what its words import; where there is a latent ambiguity in the wording, parol evidence is admissible to explain it. RAM LOCHUN SHAHA v. UNNOPOORNA DASSEE

[7 W. R., 144]

24. ———— Evidence to explain deed—Intention of parties.—Parol evidence was held admissible to explain a deed, e.g., to prove that a village not included in a patni lease was intended by the parties to be included in it. DHUNPUT SINGH DOOGUR v. JOWAHUR ALI. . . . . 8 W. R., 152

25. ———— Admissibility of evidence to identify land as that mentioned in document.—In a suit for redemption of land mortgaged to the defendant, the plaintiffs relied upon a document as containing an acknowledgment of the title of the plaintiff under s. 15 of the Act of Limitation (XIV of 1859). The document contained an admission by the defendant that he held land upon mortgage in a specified district from the temple of which plaintiffs were the trustees. Held that oral evidence was admissible to apply the document to the land to which it was intended to refer. VALAMPUDUCHERREI PADMANABHAN v. CHOWAKAREN PUDIAPURAYIL KUNHI KOLENDAN. . . . . 5 Mad., 320

26. ———— Evidence to identify land mortgaged—Evidence Act, s. 92, cl. 6, and s. 95.—The obligors of a bond for the payment of money, describing themselves as “sons of R, zamindar and pattidar, resident of mouzah S,” hypothecated as collateral security for such payment “their one biswa five biswansi share.” Held, in a suit on the bond to enforce a charge on the one biswa five biswansi share of the obligors in mouzah S, that, under prov. 6, s. 92, and s. 95 of Act I of 1872, evidence might be given to show that the obligors hypothecated by the bond their share in mouzah S. RAM LAL v. HARRISON
[I. L. R., 2 All., 832]

27. ———— Evidence to explain clause in document.—Evidence Act, s. 92—Specific Relief Act, ss. 17, 22, and 26.—The plaintiffs sued for specific performance of an agreement in writing which set forth, inter alia, that the defendants had agreed to sell, etc., under “certain conditions as agreed upon.” The defendants alleged that the written agreement did not contain the whole of the agreement between the parties, and offered parol evidence in support of their contention. Held (reversing the judgment of WILSON, J.) that the parol evidence was admissible to show what was meant by the clause “certain conditions as agreed upon.” Per PONTIFEX, J. (GARTH, C.J., dissenting)—The evidence was admissible under prov. 1, s. 92 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872). Discussion as to the meaning of s. 92 of the Evidence Act, and of ss. 17, 22, and 26 of the Specific Relief Act. CUTTS v. BROWN

28. ———— Evidence to explain identity of persons—Evidence to specify debt—Suit on promissory note.—A suit was brought on a promissory note by which the defendant promised to pay to the plaintiff R1,000 with interest. The defendant afterwards wrote the following letter to W: “I further hold myself responsible to you for the two sums of R1,000 and R900 respectively, the latter sum bearing interest at 24 per cent. per annum. Both these sums of R1,000 and R900 I engage to pay you.” Held that parol evidence was admissible to show that, though the letter was addressed to W, the

8 ——— Suit for purchase-money.—Apportionment of money.—In a suit for purchase-money oral evidence is admissible to show how the purchase-money has been apportioned. DHOXA THAKOOR v. RAM LALL SARKER 7 W. R., 408

7 ——— Guarantee.—There may be cases in which the Courts would accept and act upon parol evidence of the existence of a guarantee and its amount, but such parol evidence must be beyond suspicion. LEKHEAL v. PALKE RAM 11 N. W., 210

8 ——— Pedigree, Question of.—Proof of native pedigree.—In proving a native pedigree the oral statements of deceased relatives will be admitted in the absence of any registers of births and deaths. MOHAMED ALI KHAN v. MAHOMED [1 Ind. Jur., O. S., 132. 1 Mad., 92]

13. ——— Repayment of mortgage debt.—Verbal agreement to repay in bond.—Held that though there may be a condition for repayment of a mortgage-debt in money, the mortgagee may bind himself to receive the payment in money's worth, and in this orally, notwithstanding that the mortgage-debt is created by a written obligation. The mode in which an obligation may be discharged and satisfied by payment is a distinct matter from the obligation itself. DEBTA v. MONTU SINGH 11 Agra, 163

15 ——— Mortgage bond, Discharge of.—Admissibility of oral evidence.—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92 (d).—Oral evidence is admissible to prove the discharge and satisfaction of a mortgage bond. The provisions of s. 92 prov. 4, of the Evidence Act do not exclude such evidence. RAMLAL CHANDRA KARKOKAR v. GOBINDA K. SARKAR 4 C. W.

16 ——— Evidence Act.—Contemporaneous oral agreement.—Bond payable by instalments.—In a suit upon a kistibundi the defendants pleaded that the debt had been dated from the usufruct of certain property, by an oral agreement entered into at the time of the execution of the bond had been assigned by them to the plaintiffs for that purpose. The assignment having been proved, the Court of first instance, without further enquiry, dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. The District Judge, however, reversed the order of that Court on the ground that under s. 92 Act I of 18 evidence of the alleged oral agreement was inadmissible, it being a contemporaneous agreement varying and to some extent contradicting the terms of the kistibundi bond. On appeal it was held that the allegation of the defendants amounted merely to a plea of payment and that s. 92 of the Evidence Act was not a bar to an enquiry as to the facts.

45. ————— Contemporaneous agreement.—Oral evidence is admissible in equity where, by way of defence, the object is to get rid of a written contract of a sale of land by showing that it is not the contract really entered into by the parties, but the evidence must be very powerful to induce the Court to believe that the terms expressed are not the real ones. Evidence of a contemporaneous oral agreement to suspend the operation of a written contract of sale until an agreement for a re-sale is executed is admissible as a defence even in a Court of law. *DADA HONAJI v. 1. Introduction

The purpose of this study is to investigate the effects of the proposed system on the performance of the system.

The study is organized as follows: Section 2 describes the system architecture. Section 3 describes the experimental setup. Section 4 presents the results of the experiments. Section 5 discusses the conclusions.

The results of the experiments show that the proposed system significantly improves the performance of the system.

and for occupation after the expiry of a lease for three years, the defendant pleaded that it had been verbally agreed between himself and his lessors that he should be entitled to renewal of the lease for a further period of three years, if he so desired. Held that evidence of this oral agreement was inadmissible under s. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), being inconsistent with the terms of the second clause of the lease, which was as follows:—"If you mean me to vacate at the completion of the term, you must give one month's notice. 56. ————— Mortgage of, and advances to, indigo concern—Evidence Act, s. 92.—M, the manager of an indigo concern, under s. 243, Act VIII of 1859, by a deed dated the 1st February 1873, in which the owners of the concern joined, which was duly registered, and which was made with the Court's sanction, mortgaged the concern, and pledged and assigned the season's crop to A and B, who were parda-nashins, to secure repayment of a large sum of money, consisting partly of the balance of previous loans from the husband of A and B and partly of a new loan to the extent of what was described in the deed as the estimated outlay of the season. The deed provided that A and B should have a first charge upon the indigo to be manufactured in the season in respect of the moneys secured thereby; that the indigo should be sold, subject to A's and B's direction; that until the debt was paid, M should have no power to transfer, sell, or mortgage the properties thereby mortgaged, pledged, and assigned, or in any way to deal with the sale-proceeds of the manufactured indigo; and that A and B should have full power to arrange for the appointment and dismissal of the servants of the concern and for its better management. Previously to this, namely, in October 1872, M had, in pursuance of his letter of appointment, filed an estimate for the season's outlay largely exceeding the sum mentioned in the deed as the estimated outlay, and had alleged that, at the time of executing the mortgage-deed, he had informed one C, who was the general manager of A and B, and as such was the only medium of communication between M and A and B, that further advances would be necessary. According to M's account, C told him that A and B were unable to make further advances, and that he could, if they were needed, obtain them on the usual terms from the plaintiffs, who were indigo brokers. In previous years, during the lifetime of the husband of A and B, who had held similar mortgages of the concern and of the crop in those years to secure advances made by him, such advances had, with the mortgagee's knowledge, been supplemented by loans obtained from the plaintiffs on the security of a first charge upon the crop to the extent of such loans. And it was alleged by M that it was upon the understanding that the same course was to be followed in the present instance that the mortgage-deed to A and B was executed. In a suit against A, B, and M, to establish a first charge in respect of their advances to M upon 360 maunds of the indigo.—Held per GARTH, C.J., PHEAR and MACPHERSON, J.J., that the alleged oral agreement between C and M, as to obtaining loans, if necessary, from the plaintiffs and giving them a first charge on the season's indigo in respect of such loans, was in direct contravention and defeasance of the mortgage-deed to A and B, and was therefore inadmissible in evidence under s. 92 of the Evidence Act. MORAN v. 57. ————— Evidence Act, s. 92—Admissibility of parol evidence inconsistent with kabuliat.—Plaintiff having sued for arrears of rent payable under a kabuliat in respect of a share of four villages, the defendant pleaded that he had been put in possession of one only of the four leased to him, and that therefore he was not liable for the whole claim. Parol evidence was admitted to show that at the time the kabuliat was granted it had been agreed between the plaintiff and defendant (the title of the former being under dispute) that the whole rent payable under the kabuliat should be payable in respect of such of the villages as should actually come into defendant's possession. Held that such parol evidence was rightly admitted, there being no stipulation in the lease that the defendant should only pay rent on being put completely into possession, and that, although payment of rent is not ordinarily enforced, unless the lessor puts the lessee into possession, it was quite competent to the parties to waive such privilege. RAM KISHORE LALL v. No mutation of names was effected in the revenue registers. The creditor brought a suit against the debtor to recover the principal and interest agreed to be paid under the bond, alleging that he had never received any rents under the jamog. Held that the jamog was not a subsequent oral agreement rescinding or modifying a contract which was registered according to the law for the time being in force within s. 92, prov. 67. ————— Evidence Act, s. 92—Bill of exchange—Exclusion of evidence of oral agreement.—It was agreed between the Bank of Bengal at Calcutta and C & Co., who carried on business there, that the branch of the Bank at Cawnpore should discount bills to a certain extent drawn by C, who carried on business at Cawnpore, on C & Co., against goods to be consigned by rail to C & Co., and that the railway receipts for such consignments should be forwarded to C & Co., through the Cawnpore branch of the Bank. C accordingly drew a bill on C & Co., payable twenty-one days after date, which the Cawnpore branch of the Bank discounted, receiving the railway receipt for certain goods consigned to C & Co. C & Co. having accepted this bill, the Bank handed over the railway receipt to them. In a suit by the Bank against C on the bill, the latter set up as a defence that the bill had been discounted by the Bank on the oral understanding that the railway receipt was not to be transferred to C & Co. until they had paid the amount of the bill, and that the Bank had, by the breach of this condition, determined the defendant's liability. Held by STRAIGHT, J. (SPANKIE, J., dissenting), that evidence of such oral understanding was not admissible even under prov. 3 of s. 92 of Act I of 1872. COHEN v. BANK OF BENGAL

An oral agreement purporting to provide that the promise to pay on demand in a promissory note, though absolute in its terms, was not to be enforceable by suit until the happening of a particular event, i.e., that the legal obligation to perform the promise was to be postponed, is not such an agreement as falls within the prov. 3 to s. 92 of the Evidence Act. appears from such conduct that the apparent vendee treated the transaction as one of mortgage, the Court will give effect to it as a mortgage and nothing more. It is a mistake to reject evidence of the conduct of parties to a written contract on the ground that it is only an indication of an unexpressed unwritten contract between them. Conduct is no doubt, evidence of the agreement out of which it arose, but it may be very much more. In many cases it may amount to an estoppel. In such cases it is clear that evidence of conduct would be strictly admissible under s. 115 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872). And even when conduct falls short of a legal estoppel there is nothing in the Evidence Act which prevents it from being proved or when proved from being taken into consideration. Courts of Equity in England will always allow a party (whether plaintiff or defendant) to show that an assignment of an estate, which is on the face of it an absolute conveyance was intended to be nothing more than a security for debt, and they will not only look to the conduct of the parties, but will admit mere parol evidence to show or explain the real intention and purpose of the parties at the time. The exercise of this remedial jurisdiction is justified on two grounds viz., part performance and fraud. The Courts in India are not precluded by the Evidence Act from exercising a similar jurisdiction. The rule of estoppel, as laid down in s. 110, covers the whole ground covered by the theory of part performance. That section does not say that, in order to constitute an estoppel, the acts which a person has been induced to do must have been acts prejudicial to his own interest. Its terms are sufficiently wide to meet the case of a grantor who has simply been allowed to remain in possession on the understanding and belief

he rested is the obligation which lies upon them to prevent fraud. The Courts will not allow a rule or even a statute which was passed to suppress fraud, to be the most effectual encouragement to it, and accordingly in England the Courts, for the purpose of preventing fraud, have in some cases set aside the common law rules of evidence and the statute of frauds. The Courts in India have the same justification in dealing similarly with the obstacles interposed by the Evidence Act. In thus modifying the rules laid down by ss. 91 and 92 of that Act the Courts will not be acting in opposition to the intention of the Legislature which by enacting the provisions of s. 26, cl (c) of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) has shown an intention to relax the rules of the Evidence Act so as to bring them into conformity with the practice of the English Courts of Chancery. Quere—Whether prov. (1) to s. 92 of the Evidence Act is so large enough to let in evidence of such subsequent conduct as in the view of the Court of Equity would amount to fraud, and would entitle a grantor to a decree restraining the

Where, therefore, a deed of sale described the consideration to be Rs 100 in ready cash received, but the evidence showed that the consideration was an old bond for Rs 3-12-0 and Rs 36-4-0 in cash,—Held that there was no real variance between the statement in the deed and the evidence as to consideration, having regard to the fact that it is customary in India, when a bond is given wholly or partially in consideration of an existing debt, to describe the consideration as being "ready money received." 84. ———— Oral evidence when admissible to prove that consideration-money, stated in contract to have been paid, has not been paid, but has been applied in a way agreed on between the parties.—Evidence Act, I of 1872, s. 92.—A deed of putowa contained a recital of the payment of the sum of Rs 2,000 as bonus to the plaintiff by the defendant, the mode of payment being stated to be in cash in one lump sum. The plaintiff sued to recover the sum of Rs 1,850, alleging that only Rs 150 had been paid, and not Rs 2,000 as recited in the putowa. The defendant admitted that Rs 50 was due, and as to the remaining Rs 1,000 alleged that at the time of the transaction it was agreed that the sum of Rs 1,000 was to be retained by him on account of a debt due by one of the plaintiff's relations to him. The plaintiff objected that the evidence of the agreement set up by the defendant was inadmissible. Held that, inasmuch as it was open to the plaintiff under prov. 1 of s. 92 of the Evidence Act to prove by oral evidence that the whole of the consideration-money had not been paid, it was equally competent to the defendant, in answer to such case, to adduce evidence to prove the true nature of the contract, and that the consideration was different from that stated in the contract. Held also that the plea of the defendant substantially was that, although the consideration was fixed at Rs 2,000, there was a separate oral agreement to the effect that out of that sum the plaintiff was to refund Rs 1,000 on account of the debt due from his relative, and that on this ground the oral evidence tendered was admissible under prov. 2 of s. 92 of the Act, the stipulation as to the refund of the Rs 1,000 not being inconsistent with the recital as to the consideration in the contract. By the mortgage deed the mortgage debt was made repayable on 28th December 1896. On the 12th May 1897, the first defendant sold it by auction under the power of sale contained in the mortgage-deed, and the second defendant was the purchaser. The plaintiff now sued to set aside the sale and be allowed to redeem alleging that on the day before the sale the first defendant had orally promised and agreed to postpone the sale for four days, and that the second defendant had notice of this fact before he purchased the property. Held that evidence of such oral agreement was admissible. It was not an agreement to modify any of the terms of the mortgage, it was merely an agreement to forbear, for a period of four days, from the exercise of the power of sale given by the mortgage. It therefore did not fall within prov 4 of s 92 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872). TRIMBAK GANGADHAR KANADE v BHAGWANDAS MUL CHAND I L R, 23 Bom, 848 money lent with interest thereon at 5 per cent per mensem. It appeared that the defendant, being indebted to plaintiff on a promissory note for Rs500, applied to him for a further loan of Rs1,500 proposing to lay out the whole amount of Rs2,000 in the performance of a contract then subsisting between himself and the Madras Railway Company and offering to give plaintiff a share in such contract, that plaintiff consented to lend the said sum payable with interest at 8 or 7 per cent per mensem in lieu of becoming a partner and also to give defendant two months' previous notice on requiring repayment of the loan. Defendant demurred to the rate of interest, for Rs500 which was returned, a promissory note for 2,000, payable on demand, with interest at 12 per cent per annum, which note, plaintiff alleged it was agreed, should be cancelled on receipt of a letter from the defendant fixing the rate of interest (this was denied by defendant). Defendant subsequently wrote two letters to plaintiff, agreeing to pay interest at 5 per cent per mensem and plaintiff endorsed the said note as cancelled. Plaintiff also alleged that he received interest at the rate of 5 per cent per mensem for two months and produced a witness who deposed to that effect. This defendant denied. Held by the Original Court (following Abney v Cruz, L R, 5 C P, 37) that the oral evidence was inadmissible to show the rate of interest dehors that of the promissory note, and that the subsequent letters offering a higher rate of interest, were without consideration, for there was not any evidence of forbearance, and that the plaintiff had a right to sue on the promissory note the very day after it was made. executed on behalf of a minor by his guardian in favour of T (who did not execute it), it was recited that the mortgage was made to secure the repayment of a certain sum which T had undertaken to expend in liquidating certain debts due by the minor's estate, and, amongst others, a debt due to K. T having failed to pay this debt, K obtained a decree against, and was paid by, the minor's guardian. 100. ————— Evidence Act, 1872, s. 92—Evidence—Oral agreement inconsistent with written documents.—R, prior to his death, was a partner with defendants in the firm of N C & Co. He died on 8th November 1884. On the 9th November 1885, his executors passed a release to the defendants, which recited that R's share in the firm and future business had ceased on his death; that the surviving partners had requested the executors to settle the account of their testator with the firm, and that, after examining the books and taking accounts, etc., a balance of Rs. 395-11 was found due, on payment whereof the executors released the defendants from all claims in respect of the share and interest of R, etc. On the 7th April 1887, the executors assigned over to the plaintiff a one-anna share in the said firm, and the plaintiff, as assignee, brought this suit for a declaration of his right to the share and for an account. He alleged that there had been no accurate examination of the books at the time of the release; that the amount really due to the testator's estate by the firm had not been ascertained; and that it had been agreed on by the partners at the time of the release that, in addition to the sum therein mentioned, the executors, as representing the testator's estate, should receive a one-anna share in the partnership. The defendants denied the right of the plaintiff, and contended that the interest of R and his estate in the partnership ceased at his death. They relied on the release, and denied any agreement to give the executors a share, and contended that, under s. 92 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872), no evidence could be given of the alleged agreement. For the plaintiff it was contended that the agreement as to the one-anna share was quite independent of the release. Held that evidence of the agreement that the executors should continue to have a one-anna share in the partnership was inadmissible, as being inconsistent with the written release (Evidence Act, s. 92). By the release the executors of R released the partners from all claims whatever in respect of R's share, and the consideration for that release was stated in the document to be a lump sum, on payment of which, under the writing, all claims arising out of the old partnership ceased and determined. The oral agreement added another term to the consideration for release in respect of the past accounts, viz., the continuance of a one-anna share in the partnership. Such an agreement was not a purely collateral or additional agreement. It was an addition to the terms of a contract that had been reduced to writing, and was inconsistent with those terms. COWASJI BUTTONJI LIMBOOWALLA v. BURJORJI RUSTOMJI LIMBOOWALLA. [I. L. The words do not preclude one of two persons in whose favour a deed of sale purported to be executed from proving by oral evidence in a suit by the one against the other that the defendant was not a real, but a nominal, party only to the purchase, and that the plaintiff was solely entitled to the property to which it related. M conveyed certain houses and premises to plaintiff and defendant jointly by a sale-deed. As to this last contention, the plaintiffs alleged that by the custom of Bombay in the case of contracts made with members of the Native Piece goods Association the date of the carriers' weight

(3)—Declaration of party against proprietary interest—Presumption of party being dead.—In 1847, A, a Hindu widow, executed in favour of B a varaspatra (a deed of heirship) in the following terms:—"My husband has died. We have no issue, and you are a son of my husband's cousin. Taking this into consideration, my husband expressed his wish, when he was on the point of death, that all the houses and shops situate in Poona, except the house at Benares, should be given to you, and that you should be made owner of all money-dealings connected with Poona. I therefore, in obeying his command, pass this deed of heirship to you, and make you owner of all the property mentioned above like our son. You therefore enjoy the property in your name joyfully." Under this varaspatra, B took possession of the property mentioned therein, and enjoyed it during his lifetime. After his death, his gomasta (agent) managed it for and on behalf of B's minor son C. In 1881, C filed a suit to redeem a house and a garden, part of the property covered by the varaspatra, and which had been mortgaged by A's husband in 1831. One of the defences to this suit was that neither C nor his father was the heir of the original mortgagor, and that therefore C could not redeem the property in dispute. At the trial C produced the varaspatra of 1847 in support of his title, alleging that he had found it among the papers of the old gomasta of his father, who used to look after his affairs during his minority. Held that the varaspatra was admissible under s. 32, cl. 3, of the Evidence Act (I of 1872), as it was manifestly a declaration by A against her proprietary interest; for by it she divested herself of her widow's estate in the property, and there being no evidence of her existence after 1847, she must be presumed to have been dead in 1881, when the suit was filed. *HARI CHINTAMAN DIKSHIT v. cls. (2) and (3)—Recitals in deed—Description of boundary—Statement against pecuniary or proprietary interest.—The plaintiff sued in 1893 to recover possession of certain land. The defendants denied the plaintiff's title. The plaintiff tendered in evidence a registered mortgage-deed of adjacent land executed in 1877, which set forth the boundaries of the land comprised in the mortgage, and as one of such boundaries referred to the land in question as then belonging to the plaintiff. At the date of the deed there was no litigation existing between the present litigants, and at the date of the present suit the mortgagor was dead. existence of another—Possession of forged documents—S 11 of the Evidence Act should not be construed in its widest signification but considered as limited in its effect by s 54 of the Act. So construed s 11 renders inadmissible the evidence of one crime (not reduced to legal certainty by a conviction) to prove the existence of another unconnected crime even though it be cognate. 3. ———— Statement as to the existence of relationship—Special means of knowledge—The judgment of an Appellate Court, reversing that of a Court of first instance, on a question as to the existence of a relationship rested mainly on a statement recorded in prior settlement proceedings as made by a person, since deceased, who was employed therein as mukhtar by certain members of the family. This judgment was reversed on a second appeal by the Court above on the ground that the statement was inadmissible, not coming within the meaning of Act I of 1872, s 32, sub-s 5, as that of a person having special means of knowledge on the question. Held that the statement was inadmissible, as it appeared that his only means of knowledge were from his being instructed as such mukhtar, he not having been a member of the family, nor intimately connected with it, nor having had any special means of knowing its concerns. The claimant, to prove his title, relied upon a pedigree, not stated in any document produced that had existed in the family before this suit. The genealogy on which he claimed was, however, identical with one which his father had more than once asserted, alleging title to two mouzals of the raj estate. The Raja called upon to answer in proceedings at settlement had not given a direct denial to the alleged relationship. On the contention that there were steps in the pedigree as to which the evidence adduced did not include proof of statements made by a deceased person who had means of knowledge, or proofs of other statements within s 32 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), and as to which the evidence was insufficient,—Held that the evidence taken altogether, oral and documentary, had been sufficient to prove that the appellant was related to the deceased Raja as he had claimed to be and that the appellant was, as heir to him, entitled to inherit the raj estates on the widow's death.  [21 W. R. Cr., 12]

12. ————— Deposition of absent witness.—When the evidence of an absent witness is admitted under s. 33 of the Evidence Act, 1872, the ground for its admission should be stated fully and clearly to enable the High Court to judge of the propriety of its admission. In the present case the High Court considered that the evidence of an absent witness had been improperly admitted because there was nothing to show that by ordinary care and the use of ordinary means the witness could not have been produced. In order to make a deposition admissible under s. 33, there must be evidence that the accused person did in fact have an opportunity of cross-examining. QUEEN v. MOWJAN alias NANE KHAN

13. ————— Depositions of absent witnesses—Ground for absence.—Before a Sessions Judge can, under s. 33, Act I of 1872, admit the depositions of witnesses given in a former judicial proceeding as evidence before him instead of and in place of the oral deposition of the witnesses themselves, it ought to appear that the presence of the witnesses could not be obtained without an amount of delay or expense which the Court considers unreasonable; and if there is nothing of a special nature to stand in the way, the case should be adjourned to the next sessions to procure the attendance of the witnesses. QUEEN v. LAKKAN SANTHAL
 [21 W. R., Cr., 58]

14. ————— Inconvenience to witnesses—Question of identification—Expense.—At the trial of a person for an offence under s. 411 of the Penal Code, the Court of Session, under s. 33 of the Evidence Act, 1872, used against the accused the evidence of the owner of the property in respect of which the accused was charged and of his wife taken by commission during the enquiry, and the evidence of the servant of those persons taken at the enquiry, and also the evidence of the owner of the property taken during the trial under a commission issued by the Sessions Judge under s. 503 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The grounds upon which the Sessions Judge admitted the evidence taken during the enquiry were that the attendance of the witnesses could not be procured without an expense of Rs 500, an amount which he considered unreasonable, that the witnesses would be inconvenienced, and that their evidence did not concern the accused personally, having reference only to the identification of the property in respect of which the accused was charged. Held that the Sessions Judge had improperly admitted such evidence. Inconvenience to witnesses is no ground allowed under s. 33 of the Evidence Act, and the question of identification was a most material one, and the evidence of the witnesses in question was of the utmost moment, the whole case resting on it; and as regards the ground of expense, it was impossible to consider the amount unreasonable, considering that the entire case rested on the evidence of those witnesses, and that the accused had not cross-examined those whose evidence had been taken by commission, nor, looking at his position, could he arrange for their cross-examination. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. This pottah purported to bear the seal of one of the then maliks of the lands, and also purported to be signed on behalf of all the maliks by A. Held that, although the pottah might be an authentic document, it would not bind the maliks who did not affix their seals, nor those who claimed under them, unless it was shown that A had a special authority to sign the names of such maliks to it or a general authority to sign on their behalf documents of the same description as the pottah; and that, until such proof was given, the document was not admissible in evidence. Held, further, the fact that the pottah was more than 30 years old gave rise to the presumption that the signature at the foot of it was in the handwriting of A, and that the pottah was executed by him; but that to make it evidence against the representatives of the maliks who had not executed it, the defendants should show that A had authority to sign their names. *UBILACK RAI v. 11. ———— Ancient documents, Rule as to.—The English rule that a document more than 30 years old, if free from suspicion of dishonesty, may be admitted as evidence without proof of the execution or writing, was held to be founded on a reason which had less weight in this country, where less credit should be given to ancient documents which are unsupported by any evidence that might free them from a suspicion of being false or fabricated.

Even in England such evidence unsupported was held to be of very little weight. Accordingly it was not allowed to prevail here in a case in which there was other evidence inconsistent with the title which those documents professed to create. PHOOL BIBER v. GORR SURUN DOSS. LUTHEFOONNISA v. GORR SURUN DOSS . . . . . 18 W. R., 485

12. ———— Document 30 years old.—Proof of signature of.—A Court is not bound to accept as genuine the signature on a document upwards of 30 years old, even though it be produced from proper custody. Before accepting such document as proof of title, the Court must satisfy itself that the person who purports to have affixed his signature to the document was a person who at the time was entitled to grant such a document. UGGRAKANT CHOWDHRY v. HURRO CHUNDER SHICKDAR . . . . . [I. L. R., 6 Calc., 209

13. ———— Documents more than 30 years old.—Proof of execution.—Evidence of authority to sign on behalf of others.—The plaintiffs sued the defendants for enhancement of rent. The defendants resisted the claim, relying, inter alia, on a moku-rari pottah executed on 9th October 1832. This pottah purported to bear the seal of one of the then maliks of the lands, and also purported to be signed on behalf of all the maliks by A. Held that, although the pottah might be an authentic document, it would not bind the maliks who did not affix their seals, nor those who claimed under them, unless it was shown that A had a special authority to sign the names of such maliks to it or a general authority to sign on their behalf documents of the same description as the pottah; and that, until such proof was given, the document was not admissible in evidence. Held, further, the fact that the pottah was more than 30 years old gave rise to the presumption that the signature at the foot of it was in the handwriting of A, and that the pottah was executed by him; but that to make it evidence against the representatives of the maliks who had not executed it, the defendants should show that A had authority to sign their names. UBILACK RAI v. DALLIAL RAI . . . . .

14. ———— Legal presumption.—Previous production of such document.—No legal presumption can arise as to the genuineness of a document more than 30 years old, merely upon proof that it was produced from the records of a Court in which it had been filed at some time previous. It must be shown that the document had been so filed in order to the adjudication of some question of which that Court had cognizance, and which had come under the cognizance of such Court. *GUDADHUR PAUL CHOWDHRY v. 15. ———— Ancient document.—Evidence of proper custody.—To establish the authenticity of a document so old that the witnesses to its execution cannot reasonably be expected to be in existence, it is not necessary to go behind the possession of the present owner. If the custody from which the document comes into Court has been and is the

2. ————— Protection given to answers which a witness is compelled to give—"Compelled to give." Meaning of the words—Indian Oaths Act (X of 1873), s. 14.—S. 132 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) makes a distinction between those cases in which a witness voluntarily answers a question and those in which he is compelled to answer, and gives him a protection in the latter of these cases only. Protection is afforded only to answers which a witness has objected to give or which he has asked to be excused from giving, and which then he has been compelled by the Court to give. Queen v. Gopal Dass, I.L.R., 3 Mad., 721, followed. Per BIRDWOOD, J. (dissenting)—S. 132 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872), read with s. 14 of the Indian Oaths Act (X of 1873), compels a witness to answer criminating questions, and he is protected by the proviso to s. 132 from a criminal prosecution for any offence of which he criminales himself directly or indirectly by his answer, except a prosecution for giving false evidence by such answer. It is not only when a witness asks to be excused from answering a criminating question and his request is refused that he is "compelled to give" the answer within the meaning of the proviso. The compulsion is operative, whether he asks to be excused or gives the answer without so asking. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. GANU SONDA [I. L. R., 12 Bom., 440]

3. ————— "Compelled"—Compelling witness to answer questions.—The word "compelled" in the proviso to s. 132 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) applies only where the Court has compelled a witness to answer a question, and not to a case where the witness has not asked to be excused from answering a question, but gives his answer without any claim to have himself excused. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. MOSS . . . I. L. R., 16 All., 88

4. ————— and ss. 129, 130, 131—Compelling witness to answer questions.—The mere subpoenaing of a witness or ordering him to go into the witness-box does not compel him to give any particular answer or to answer any particular question. The words "shall be compelled to give" in s. 132, Evidence Act, apply to pressure put upon a witness after he is in the box, and when he asks to be excused from answering a question. The wording of ss. 129, 130, 131, 132, and 148, Evidence Act, compared and discussed. MOHER SHEIKH v. QUEEN-EMPRESS . . . I. L. R., 21 Calc., 392

cl. (3)—Evidence in reply impeaching the credit of a witness.—In a suit by one K claiming (inter alia) a share in a business as heiress of A, her father, the defendant pleading limitation, K, before the close of her case, put in evidence an entry in a Koran to shew that she was born in 1279, and in the cross-examination of M, a witness for the defence, put to him a letter purporting to have been written by A to M, supporting K's case. Upon M denying the genuineness of the Koran and of certain words in the letter, it was proposed on behalf of K to give evidence in reply shewing that M had made statements to an attorney before the case inconsistent with his evidence, both as to the Koran and the letter. Held that evidence might be given in reply as regards the Koran, but not as regards the letter; no substantive evidence having been given as to the latter before the close of the plaintiff's case. Semble—The expression "which is liable to be contradicted" in s. 155 (3) of the Evidence Act is equivalent to "which is relevant to the issue." *KHADIJAH KHANUM v. The suits were re-instituted, and duplicate copies of the plaints were filed. The only evidence of the contents of the bonds, from which the plaints were prepared, consisted of a register kept by the plaintiff's gomastas of the names of the executants of the bonds, the matter in respect of which the bonds had been given, the amounts due thereunder, and the names of the attesting witnesses. From this register the duplicate plaints had been prepared. Held that, though the register was not secondary evidence of the contents of the bonds, yet it was a document which might be referred to by a witness for the purpose of refreshing his memory, under s. 159 of the Evidence Act. *TARUCK NATH MULLICK v. 1. — s. 132—Answers criminating witness—Voluntary statement—Privilege of witness answering criminating question—In a Small Cause suit under Ch. XXXIX of the Code of Civil Procedure on a promissory note, which was alleged to have been executed jointly by W and his son V, V filed an affidavit in order to obtain leave to defend the suit, and, having obtained leave to defend, gave evidence at the trial on his own behalf. On a subsequent trial of V for forgery of his father's signature to the same promissory note, the affidavit and deposition of V in the Small Cause suit were admitted as evidence against V. Held by TURNER, C. J., INNES and KINDERSLEY, J. J., that both the affidavit and the deposition were properly admitted. By KERNAN and MUTTUSAMY AYYAR, J. J., that the affidavit was properly admitted, but not the deposition. Per TURNER, C. J., INNES and KINDERSLEY, J. J.—Where an accused person has made a statement on oath voluntarily and without compulsion on the part of the Court to which the statement is made, such a statement, if relevant, may be used against him on

tion, if the answer is relevant, is perfectly futile, so far as his duty to answer is concerned and must be overruled. QUEEN c GOPAL DASS

2. ———— Protection given to answers which a witness is compelled to give.—"Compelled to give," Meaning of the words—Indian Oaths Act (X of 1873), s. 14.—S. 132 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) makes a distinction between those cases in which a witness voluntarily answers a question and those in which he is compelled to answer, and gives him a protection in the latter of these cases only. Protection is afforded only to answers which a witness has objected to give or which he has asked to be excused from giving, and which then he has been compelled by the Court to give. Queen v. Gopal Dass, I.L.R., 3 Mad., 721, followed. Per BIRDWOOD, J. (dissenting)—S. 132 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872), read with s. 14 of the Indian Oaths Act. (X of 1873), compels a witness to answer criminating questions, and he is protected by the proviso to s. 132 from a criminal prosecution for any offence of which he criminales himself directly or indirectly by his answer, except a prosecution for giving false evidence by such answer. It is not only when a witness asks to be excused from answering a criminating question and his request is refused that he is "compelled to give" the answer within the meaning of the proviso. The compulsion is operative, whether he asks to be excused or gives the answer without so asking. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. GANU SONBA [I. L. R., 12 Bom., 440]

3. ———— "Compelled"—Compelling witness to answer questions.—The word "compelled" in the proviso to s. 132 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) applies only where the Court has compelled a witness to answer a question, and not to a case where the witness has not asked to be excused from answering a question, but gives his answer without any claim to have himself excused. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. MOSS . . . I. L. R., 16 All., 88

4. ———— and ss. 129, 130, 131—Compelling witness to answer questions.—The mere subpoenaing of a witness or ordering him to go into the witness-box does not compel him to give any particular answer or to answer any particular question. The words "shall be compelled to give" in s. 132, Evidence Act, apply to pressure put upon a witness after mpt of the box, and when he asks to be excused from e is re question. cl. (3)—Evidence in reply im-peaching the credit of a witness.—In a suit by one K claiming (inter alia) a share in a business as heiress of A, her father, the defendant pleading limitation, K, before the close of her case, put in evidence an entry in a Koran to shew that she was born in 1279, and in the cross-examination of M, a witness for the defence, put to him a letter purporting to have been written by A to M, supporting K's case.
Upon M denying the genuineness of the Koran and of certain words in the letter, it was proposed on behalf of K to give evidence in reply shewing that M had made statements to an attorney before the case inconsistent with his evidence, both as to the Koran and the letter. — Held that evidence might be given in reply as regards the Koran, but not as regards the letter; no substantive evidence having been given as to the latter before the close of the plaintiff's case.

s. 159—Bonds destroyed by fire—Refreshing memory of witness.—The plaints and records in a number of suits upon bonds instituted by the same plaintiff against different persons were destroyed by fire. The suits were re-instituted, and duplicate copies of the plaints were filed. The only evidence of the contents of the bonds, from which the plaints were prepared, consisted of a register kept by the plaintiff's gomastas of the names of the executants of the bonds, the matter in respect of which the bonds had been given, the amounts due thereunder, and the names of the attesting witnesses.
From this register the duplicate plaints had been prepared. Held that, though the register was not secondary evidence of the contents of the bonds, yet it was a document which might be referred to by a witness for the purpose of refreshing his memory, under s. 159 of the Evidence Act.

Under s. 216 of the former Code (Act VIII of 1859), a notice was issued on the same day to the defendants, calling upon them to show cause why the decree should not be executed. The defendants accordingly appeared on the day fixed, at which date the new Code had come into force, and contended that under s. 266, cl. (g), of the new Code, the pension was no longer attachable. Held that all proceedings commenced and pending when Act X of 1877 became law were, under the General Clauses Act (Act I of 1868), s. 6, to be governed by the Code theretofore in force, the general rule of construction contained in that section not being affected or varied by ss. 1 and 3 of Act X of 1877; and that a bonâ fide application for enforcement of a decree in a particular way, coupled with an order of the Court in furtherance of that object, as much constitutes a proceeding in execution commenced and pending as the actual issue of a warrant of attachment. VIDYARAM v. The will was afterwards disputed by the minor son of the testator, and probate was revoked; but, while the mother was in possession of the estate as executrix, she sued and obtained a decree for rent under Bengal Act VIII of 1869. Upon the application of the minor for the execution of the decree,—Held that the mode in which the decree was executed under the old Rent Act, Bengal Act VIII of 1869, was, in so far as it was a right at all that belonged to the judgment-creditor, not a private right, but a mere right of procedure, and the execution was therefore to be governed by Act VIII of 1885. UMASOONDURY DASSY v. 10. ————— Decree transferred to Collector for execution—Talukhdars Act (Bombay Act VI of 1888), s. 31, cl. 2—Construction of statute—Retrospective operation—Sanction to sale made necessary by new law.—A decree upon a mortgage-bond passed against part of a talukhdar's estate on the 15th August 1887 was transferred, under s. 320 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), to the Collector for execution. The property was sold on the 5th August 1889, but the Collector refused to confirm the sale, as the sanction of the Governor in Council under cl. 2, s. 31 of the Talukhdars Act (Bombay Act VI of 1888), which came into force on the 25th March 1889, had not been obtained. Held that the section was not retrospective in its operation, and that the sale should be confirmed, although no sanction had been obtained. When the Act passed, the plaintiff had already acquired a vested right by the decree to have the property sold, and the presumption was that the Legislature did not intend to interfere with that vested right. That presumption was not rebutted by any intention to interfere appearing in the Act itself. KALIAN MOTI v. PATHUBHAI FALJIBHAI in execution in the present case, and in that view the Court below was bound, upon the application of the judgment-debtor, to set aside the sale, and, not having done so, it had failed to exercise jurisdiction within the meaning of s. 622 of the Code. The judgment-debtor now applied under the Civil Procedure Code, s. 310A, that the sale be set aside. Held that the provisions of Act V of 1894, whereby the abovementioned section was added to the Civil Procedure Code, were applicable to the case. RANGASAMI NAIDU v. 14. ——— Sale in execution of a decree upon a mortgage before the Act—Gujarat Talukhdars Act (Bombay Act VI of 1888), s. 31—Necessity of sanction of the Governor in Council to the sale.—Certain talukhdari estate was mortgaged under a sankhat executed before the Gujarat Talukhdars Act (Bombay Act VI of 1888) came into force. On the 22nd August 1889 (i.e., subsequent to the Act coming into force), a decree was passed for sale of the mortgaged property. The decree was transferred for execution to the Collector, who refused to put up the property to sale without the previous sanction of Government, as required by s. 31 of the Talukhdari Act. Held that s. 31 of the Act had no application to the present case. The san-mortgage having been executed before the Act came into force, and left with its validity untouched by cl. (1) of s. 31, the ordinary remedy of the mortgagee to bring the property to sale was not taken away by that section. The sanction of the Governor in Council was therefore not necessary to the sale in execution of the decree on the mortgage. NAGAR PRAGJI v. JIVABHAI BAVASI . . . . . I. L. R., 19 Bom., 80

Consolidation Act (I of 1868), s 6—On the 30th January 1894 an application was made for execution of a decree passed on the 5th of the same month, and certain property was thereafter duly attached. On the 8th February 1894, the sale proclamation was published, and on the 26th March the sale was held. On the 17th April 1894, the judgment debtor applied to the Court under the provisions of s 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure (which section was added to the Code by Act V of 1894, and which came into operation on the 2nd March 1894) to have the sale set aside on payment to the auction-purchaser of 5 per cent, on the purchase-money and to the decree-holder of the amount mentioned in the sale proclamation. The auction-purchaser resisted the application on the ground that the section could not affect the sale in question. Held (PETHEBAM, C J, and O'HEANEALY, J dissenting) that the section conferred a new and substantive right on the judgment debtor, and was not merely a matter of procedure, and that, as Act V of 1894 does not clearly indicate the intention of the

The decree was for a total amount of Rs. 1,282. Subsequently, on application by the decree-holder and without giving notice to the judgment-debtor, the Court which passed the decree, purporting to act under s. 206 of the Civil Procedure Code, altered the decree and made it for a sum of Rs. 1,460. The decree-holder took out execution, and the judgment-debtor objected that the decree was for Rs. 1,282 and had been improperly altered. The Court executing the decree disallowed the objection on the ground that it was not such as could be entertained in the execution department. Held that, when a decree-holder executes his decree, a judgment-debtor is competent to object that the decree is not the decree of the Court fit to be executed, and therefore not capable of execution; and that the judgment-debtor in this case could raise the question whether the decree, which was altered behind his back, was a valid decree and fit to be executed. ABDOOL HAYAT KHAN v. In default of payment within the prescribed time, they were to stand forever foreclosed. Against this decree the defendant appealed to the High Court. On the 10th September 1888, the High Court passed an order allowing the defendant to withdraw the appeal. On the 17th December 1888, plaintiffs applied for execution of the decree of the 12th November 1886. The lower Court, regarding the withdrawal of the second appeal as practically a confirmation of the decree of the 12th November 1886, computed the six months allowed for redemption from the date of the order of withdrawal (10th September 1888) and granted the plaintiffs' application. On appeal to the High Court, —Held, reversing the decision of the lower Court, that the application was time-barred, and that the plaintiff was foreclosed. The time allowed for redemption was to be computed, not from the date of the High Court's order permitting the withdrawal of the appeal, but from the date of the decree applied from (i.e., 12th November 1886). The order of withdrawal was not a decree. The only decree which could be executed was that of the 12th November 1886. The redemption money not having been paid within six months from that date, the plaintiffs were foreclosed. The Court could not in execution-proceedings enlarge the time fixed for redemption. Ishwargar v. Chudasama Manabhai, I. L. R., 13 Bom., 106, followed. Per BIRDWOOD, J.—It was open to the plaintiffs to apply, if so advised, to the High Court for a review of the order of withdrawal of the 10th September 1888, with a view to the enlargement of the time of redemption as a condition which might equitably have been permitted when the defendant was allowed to withdraw the second appeal. *PATLOJI v. S. 647 of the Code of Civil Procedure cannot, on its true construction, be applied to execution of decree, and was inapplicable to petitions for execution before, and independently of the passing of Act VI of 1892, ss. 4 and 5. A first application for execution of a decree having been, on the decree-holder's petition, struck off the list of cases pending for hearing, a second application was made within the period of limitation. Held that the first application, notwithstanding that the order striking it off had been made, was not annulled, but afforded a fresh starting point for limitation. Held also that, although the petition for execution had been withdrawn without leave to apply again having been expressly granted by the Court, the petitioner's right to renew his petition within due time remained. The plaintiff brought a suit for the recovery of certain timber or damages for its removal, and got a decree. The defendant appealed, and was ultimately successful in getting the plaintiff's suit dismissed, but meanwhile the timber had been taken in execution of the decree and sold. The defendant applied to the original Subordinate Judge's Court in execution of the High Court decree for restitution of the timber or R13,325 damages. The plaintiff objected that the defendant must bring a suit, and could not make this claim in execution. The Subordinate Judge overruled this objection, but held that he was limited to a grant of R5,000, the pecuniary limit to his original jurisdiction, and awarded the defendant that sum for his timber. Held the matter was rightly dealt with in execution, and that the jurisdiction of the original Court in execution was neither ousted by the fact that the value of the property in dispute exceeded the pecuniary limits of the Court's jurisdiction,

On the 1st March 1886, a decree was passed declaring the plaintiffs entitled to redeem on payment by them to the defendants of R649-11-0 within three months from the date of the decree. Against this decree the defendants (the mortgagees) appealed on the ground that a much larger sum than R649-11-0 was due to them on the mortgage. The plaintiffs also filed objections to this decree under s. 561 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) on the ground that the mortgage-debt had been long ago paid off, and that now a large sum was due to them from the mortgagees who had been in receipt of the profits of the property. Under these circumstances, the plaintiffs did not pay the R649-11-0 within three months as ordered by the decree. On the 12th October 1886, they presented an application for execution, and paid into Court the R649-11-0. The lower Court granted their application, and ordered possession of the property to be given to them. The defendants appealed to the High Court. Held, reversing the order of the Court below, that the Court in executing the decree had no power to alter the language of the decree, which it would virtually do if it enlarged the time mentioned in it by accepting the R649-11-0 paid into Court by the plaintiffs on the 12th October 1886. Held also that, even if the Court had power to enlarge the time in the course of execution, the mere fact that the plaintiff had lodged an appeal would afford no special ground for enlarging the time. *ISHWARGAR v. 88. ——— Execution of order giving effect to judgment of Privy Council—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 211, 253, 318—Mesne profits—Cost of receiver and management—Interest on mesne profits—Sureties for execution of decree.—Land was put up for sale and purchased in execution of a decree. The sale was confirmed and the purchaser was put into possession. On appeal against the order confirming the sale, the High Court held that the sale had been vitiated by certain irregularities and set it aside. The purchaser preferred an appeal to the Privy Council against the judgment of the High Court. While the appeal was pending, he was compelled to deliver up possession of the land, but security was furnished under an order of the Court by persons not being parties to the suit for its re-delivery to him and for the payment of mesne profits in the event of his appeal being successful. Meanwhile the land in question was placed in charge of a receiver on the motion of other persons holding decrees against the judgment-debtors. On appeal the Privy Council reversed the order of the High Court. The purchaser was accordingly replaced in possession of the land, and he applied for execution in respect of the mesne profits against the respondents in the Privy Council and the sureties. The Court of first instance dismissed the application as against the sureties, and limited the applicant's claim against the others to the net income of the land, less the cost of management by the receiver, and allowed him no interest. Held (1), although the appeals to the High Court and the Privy Council related to the order confirming the sale, and not to that by which possession was awarded, and the order in Council did not direct payment of mesne profits, yet such payment was within its purview as being a benefit by way of restitution fairly and reasonably consequential upon it—Rodger v. Comptoir D'Escompte de Paris, L. R., 3 P. C., 465, followed; (2) the application was rightly dismissed against the sureties; (3) the charges involved by the appointment of the receiver should not have been allowed against the petitioner, since they were not necessary in the ordinary course of prudent management; (4) interest at 6 per cent. should have been allowed to the petitioner on the mesne profits for each year from the end of the year to the date of payment.

The effect of s. 579 of the Civil Procedure Code is to cause the decree of the Appellate Court to supersede the decree of the first Court even where the appellate decree merely affirms the original decree, and does not reverse or modify it. Where a decree has been affirmed on appeal, the only decree which can be amended under s. 206 of the Code is the decree to be executed, and the decree to be executed is that of the Appellate Court and not the superseded decree of the first Court, though the latter may, if necessary, be referred to for the purpose of executing the appellate decree. The only Court which has jurisdiction to amend the appellate decree is the Court of appeal. So held by the Full Bench, MAHMOOD, J., dissenting. Shohrat Singh v. Bridgman, I. L. The decree of a Court of first instance having on appeal been affirmed by the High Court, the first Court altered the decree which had been affirmed, intending to bring it into accordance with the judgment of the High Court. After the decree had been altered, application was made to execute it as altered, but this was opposed by the judgment-debtor on the ground that that was not the decree which could be executed. Held by the Full Bench that the objection must prevail on the grounds that the decree sought to be executed was not that of the Appellate Court, and that the decree had been altered by the first Court, which had no power to alter it. *Abdul Hayai Khan v. on payment within three months of the amount due to the mortgagee, which was to be ascertained in execution proceedings. Against this decree the defendant appealed to the High Court. Pending the appeal, the plaintiff presented a darkhast for execution on the 4th October 1888. This darkhast was dismissed, as the plaintiff failed to produce a copy of the mortgage bond within the time allowed by the Court. The three months allowed by the decree for payment expired on the 23rd October 1888. On 11th February 1890, the High Court confirmed the decree, and on 11th April 1890 plaintiff presented a fresh darkhast for execution. Both the lower Courts dismissed this darkhast on the ground that the dismissal of the first darkhast operated as res judicata. Held that the plaintiff was entitled to execute the decree, and that his second darkhast was not barred either by limitation or on the principle of res judicata. NANCHAND v. VIREU from which limitation runs after an appeal.—In a suit for the value of goods and for damages, the Court allowed the claim with respect only to a portion of the plaintiffs' claim, and rejected the rest. The plaintiffs appealed against the latter part of the decree. The decree was confirmed in appeal. The plaintiffs applied for execution of the decree after the expiration of three years from the date of the original decree, but within three years from the date of the appellate decree. The lower Court rejected the application as time-barred, being of opinion that the original decree still existed, there having been no appeal against that part of the decree which allowed the claim. Held, discharging the order of rejection, that when the Appellate Court confirms the decree of the Court below, the latter becomes incorporated in the decree of the Appellate Court, which is thenceforth the only decree to be executed. Judgment was given in favour of the plaintiffs, and was also entered up in all the remaining cases. Defendant appealed from these decisions to the High Court, which reversed the Recorder's decision in the first case, and subsequently, without hearing argument, reversed the decisions in such (seven) of the eleven as were appealable. Held that the decrees passed by the Recorder's Court in the four unappealed suits were good decrees, on which execution could be issued in the usual form, provided they were not altered on review. NGA BIKE v. In default of payment by the defendants, the plaintiffs were to take possession of the land. The plaintiffs were to give the defendants credit for any sums which they had paid as rent since the year 1882-83. Both parties appealed to the High Court from this decree. While these appeals were still pending, the plaintiffs, on the 13th February 1890, applied for execution of the decree. They prayed for immediate possession and for Rs34 alleged to be the rent due under the decree, viz., Rs34 for 1882-83, and Rs50 for each of the six years from 1883-84 to 1888-89 inclusive. The application was granted by the Subordinate Judge, and the plaintiffs obtained possession on the 19th February 1890. On the 20th March 1890, the defendants applied to be restored to possession, stating that they had appealed to the High Court against the decree of the District Court, which had fixed their rent at the enhanced rate of Rs50, and that their appeal was still pending; that the sum of Rs34 was not due to the plaintiffs, inasmuch as they (the defendants) had continued to pay the rent at the old rate (viz., Rs34) to the village officers together with the local fund cess Rs2-2-0, being a total of Rs36-2-0 for each of the six years. They contended that the plaintiffs were thus entitled only to Rs3-4-0, and not Rs34, and they claimed to get back the land on the ground that the plaintiffs had obtained possession on an illegal application. While this application of the 20th March 1890 was still pending, the appeals against the District Court's decree of the 13th February 1889 came on for hearing before the High Court, which confirmed that decree on the 17th July 1890. Thereupon the defendants, on the 1st August 1890, brought into Court Rs98 (being the difference between the old rent which they had paid and the enhanced rent payable under the confirmed decree), and applied to be restored to possession. On the 6th February 1891, the defendants' application of the 20th March 1890 came on for hearing, and was rejected by the Subordinate Judge on the ground that the defendants had not obeyed the District Court's decree. The defendants thereupon appealed to the District Court, which reversed that decision, and ordered that possession should be given to the defendants on the ground that the time for payment of the amount due under the decree should be reckoned from the date of the confirmation of the decree by the High Court, viz., 17th July 1890, and that by their payments made to the village officers and their payment into Court on the 1st August 1890 the defendants had obeyed the decree, and were entitled to be put back into possession. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court. Held (reversing the order of the District Court and restoring that of the Subordinate Judge) that the defendants could not recover possession. The fact that they had appealed to the High Court could not prevent the decree of the District Court from being executed, or enlarge the time for payment of the rent as decreed by that Court. No stay of execution was asked for, and all that the Subordinate Judge had to see in February 1890 was whether payment of rent had been made in accordance with the terms of the decree of the District Court made on the 13th February 1889. The defendants had not paid that rent when the plaintiffs executed the decree on the 19th February 1890. The decree was legally executed before the High Court's decree was passed on the 17th July 1890, and that execution could not be afterwards cancelled, because of the High Court's decree. When the decree of the District Court was passed, the defendants should at once have paid to

The mortgagor sought to redeem within six months from the date of the appellate decree, but more than six months from the date of the original decree. Held that, though the decree of the Appellate Court became the final decree in the suit, and the only one capable of execution, yet unless the time for payment of the redemption money has been postponed under s 93 of the Transfer of Property Act or the decree of the original Court has been modified by an order on the appeal that the redemption money should be paid within six months of the date of the Appellate Court decree, the mortgagor may lose his right of redemption, the Court, therefore, to which application for execution was made should, before passing orders on the application have given the plaintiff time to apply to the District Court to amend the decree under Transfer of Property Act, s 92. MANAVIKRAMAN v UNNIAPPAN

The decree contained no clause of foreclosure in the event of non payment. On the 19th April 1886, the defendants appealed to the High Court against the decree. On the 12th October 1886, long after the expiration of the three months prescribed by the decree, the plaintiff paid Rs 49 11 0 into the lower Court, and applied for execution of the decree. Before the sale another suit, instituted in the same Court for the purpose of having other property substituted in lieu of part of that mortgaged, was transferred to the Court of the District Judge, who decreed, upon consent, that the substituted property should be sold, and that, for the purpose of this sale, this suit should be taken as supplemental to the former one. On the petition of the mortgagee for execution of the decrees, in both suits, in the District Court, it was objected that execution could not proceed therein, on the ground that the decree for sale was that of the Subordinate Court. Held that the decree (which affected the whole property mortgaged) was that of the District Court, which accordingly had jurisdiction to execute it. To have enabled the Subordinate Court so to do, an order by the District Court would have been necessary. Judge rejected this application on the ground that execution had been going on for several years contrary to the ruling in *Khusaldas v. The judgment-debtor then applied to the first Court for execution of the decree, and thereupon the judgment-debtor objected that that Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the application or to direct the sale of the property. Held that that Court had authority to execute its own decree and bring the property to sale. Held, further, that s. 223 (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure does not curtail the power of a Court to execute its own decree, but gives it a discretion either to execute the decree itself or, on the application of the decree-holder, to send it to another Court for execution, and thereby

The defendant was a sorter in the Railway Mail Service, and travelled between Bhusaval and Nagpur, at which latter place he resided and received his pay. By an order of attachment issued, at the plaintiff's instance, by the Bhusaval Court to the defendant's disbursing officer at Nagpur, a moiety of the defendant's pay having been withheld by that officer, the defendant applied to the Bhusaval Court to cancel the order, contending that it was illegal, as neither he nor his disbursing officer resided at Bhusaval. On reference to the High Court, Held that the order of attachment was ultra vires, as neither the defendant nor his disbursing officer resided within the jurisdiction of the Bhusaval Court. The writ of fi. fa. which issued from the Supreme Court was an authority to the Sheriff not only to seize, but also to sell. S. 250 of the Civil Procedure Code applied neither to executions against immoveable property nor to executions against debts due to the defendant; and in order to give to third parties full opportunity of vindicating their right before sale and also to give the defendant an opportunity of paying, it has not been usual to issue process of attachment and sale simultaneously even against personal property, and it would not seem to be proper to do so, except under special circumstances. *FINANCIAL ASSOCIATION OF INDIA AND CHINA v. Judgment was entered up, and a decree obtained thereon soon after the bond was executed. In accordance with a covenant in the mortgage-deed, the mortgagees entered into possession and receipt of the rents and profits of the estate, which they were authorized to receive for five years from the date of the mortgage. They remained in possession for six years, and then, more than one year having elapsed since any proceedings in execution had been taken, they applied for execution of their decree against the mortgaged property. Before execution of that decree, some of the mortgaged property was taken up by Government under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, 1870. The mortgagees never put in any claim with regard to the mortgaged property in response to the notification made under s. 9 of the last-mentioned Act, but subsequently sought to attach in the hands of the Collector the compensation money about to be paid to the mortgagor. On these facts, it was held that the mortgagees were not entitled to attach such money in execution of their decree under the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. Their remedy was to proceed against the mortgaged property not taken up, and if the proceeds of sale of that were insufficient, then to apply to the Court under s. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act for a decree for the balance. *BASA MAL v. Held that no separate cause of action for the personal remedy accrued after the mortgaged property was found on sale to be insufficient to satisfy the mortgage-debt, but that the cause of action for both remedies was one and the same, and accrued when the covenant to pay was broken. Hence, the suit for sale of the mortgaged property having been brought more than ten years after the date of the mortgage, the balance due upon the mortgage was not legally recoverable otherwise than out of the property sold, and an application for a decree under s. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act was not maintainable. *Musahab Zaman Khan v. That Court confirmed the decree of the lower Court. In obedience to the decree, the judgment-debtor deposited in Court certain property in his possession consisting of bonds, decrees, and other articles. 373. ——— Execution by representative—Illegitimacy, Question of—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, ss. 102, 103, and 208—Act XXIII of 1861, s. 11.—The questions which, under s. 11, Act XXIII of 1861, may be determined by a Court executing a decree, must be between parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, and must relate to the execution of the decree. A person who was not on the record when the decree was made does not constitute himself a party to the suit by applying for execution, and a question as to his legitimacy is consequently not one which the Court executing the decree is competent to entertain. Ss. 102 and 103 of Act VIII of 1859 relate only to proceedings prior to decree, and not to proceedings in execution. S. 208 of the same Act does not apply where the person seeking to execute is not a transferee from the original decree-holder, either by assignment or operation of law. The section does not apply to cases where the right to an equitable interest in a decree is seriously contested, and was not intended to enable a Court to try, on an application for execution, such an important question as the legitimacy of an heir. Since proceedings under s. 208, Act VIII of 1859, were, by s. 364 of the Act, not liable to appeal, a suit would probably lie to reverse an order passed therein. *ABIDUNNISSA KHATOON v. action under arrangements made by Court—Limitation—Subsequent application for execution—In execution of a decree, an order was made by the Court directing the payment of the rents of certain property which had been attached as they became due from the mukaridar to the judgment debtors, to be made to the decree holder to satisfy his decree, and afterwards the execution case was struck off the file. Subsequently, default having been made by the mukaridar in the payment of the rents of certain years and the decree not having been fully satisfied, the decree holder applied for an order directing the payment of the rents which were in arrear to be made by the mukaridar in accordance with the previous order. Notice having been directed to be served on the judgment debtors, they came in and pleaded limitation. Held that, as the application was not strictly one for fresh execution, limitation could not apply, and that, as the effect of the order in the execution proceedings was virtually to appoint the decree holder receiver under the provisions of a 243 of Act

373. ——— Execution by representative—Illegitimacy. Question of—Civil Procedure Code, 1859, ss. 102, 103, and 208—Act XXIII of 1861, s. 11.—The questions which, under s. 11, Act XXIII of 1861, may be determined by a Court executing a decree, must be between parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, and must relate to the execution of the decree. A person who was not on the record when the decree was made does not constitute himself a party to the suit by applying for execution, and a question as to his legitimacy is consequently not one which the Court executing the decree is competent to entertain. Ss. 102 and 103 of Act VIII of 1859 relate only to proceedings prior to decree, and not to proceedings in execution. S. 208 of the same Act does not apply where the person seeking to execute is not a transferee from the original decree-holder, either by assignment or operation of law. The section does not apply to cases where the right to an equitable interest in a decree is seriously contested, and was not intended to enable a Court to try, on an application for execution, such an important question as the legitimacy of an heir. Since proceedings under s. 208, Act VIII of 1859, were, by s. 364 of the Act, not liable to appeal, a suit would probably lie to reverse an order passed therein. *ABIDUNNISSA KHATOON v. In such cases the representative, and not the deceased person, is the defendant (ss. 104 and 203); and in the notification of sale (s. 249) and in the certificate of sale (s. 259) it ought to be set forth that what is sold is the right, title, and interest of the representative on the record. NATHI HARI v. provision for it in the sections relating to execution. Ss. 361 to 372 relate to changes during suit, and speak only of plaintiffs and defendants—terms which seem to show that they were only intended to apply to proceedings up to final determination by the appellate decree and not to proceedings in execution between the judgment-creditor and judgment-debtor. A Court of appeal having confirmed the decrees of a second class Subordinate Judge, the decree was transferred for execution to the first class Subordinate Judge. After the transfer, the judgment-debtor died. The judgment-creditor then applied to the first class Subordinate Judge to substitute on the record the name of the representative of the deceased. The first class Subordinate Judge rejected the application and referred the judgment-creditor to the second class Subordinate Judge, who also rejected the application on the ground that the decree which was being executed was the appellate decree in which his decree was merged, and therefore he had no jurisdiction to entertain the application. Held that the course open to the judgment-creditor was by way of application to execute the decree against the legal representative of the deceased as provided by s. 254 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), in which case the application to execute the decree, having regard to s. 583, would be to the second class Subordinate Judge, although by s. 248 the notice to the party against whom execution was applied for would be issued by the first class Subordinate Judge to whom the decree was transferred for execution. HIRACHAND HARJIVANDAS v. Pending the proceedings, one of the judgment-debtors died. On an application to that Court by the judgment-creditor to execute the decree against the legal representative of the deceased judgment-debtor, a notice was issued under s. 248 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The legal representative objected that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the application, and that the application should have been made under s. 234 of the Code to the Court that passed the decree. Held that the power of the Court executing a decree to order execution under s. 249 against the legal representative of a deceased judgment-debtor, after the issue of notice under s. 248, is not cut down by the provisions of s. 234, which simply empowers the decree-holder to apply to the Court which passed the decree to execute it against the legal representative of a judgment-debtor who is dead, and that the Court to which the decree has been transferred has full jurisdiction to allow execution to proceed against the legal representative. Held also that, even assuming that an application under s. 234 to the Court which passed the decree was a necessary

405. ————— Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 234.—Under s. 234 of the Civil Procedure Code, the legal representative of a deceased judgment-debtor is liable summarily only in respect of property actually received by him, or taken into his disposition. On the 27th March 1878, one B obtained a decree for Rs. 2,100 against one P, who died in July of that year, leaving his son H his legal representative. Subsequently, one Homjibhai sued H as the legal representative of P upon a mortgage executed by the latter in his lifetime, and obtained a decree, in execution of which he sold the mortgaged property by auction, and bought it in himself for Rs. 10. On appeal, this decree was reversed on the 3rd August 1883. Instead of thereupon recovering the property which had been sold in execution, H, on the 16th November 1883, agreed with Homjibhai that the latter should retain it on payment of Rs. 240 as costs of the suit. Shortly before this compromise was effected, B sold her decree to the appellant, K, who in 1884 applied for execution against H. The Subordinate Judge made an order for execution against H personally to the extent of Rs. 10, holding that H had fraudulently adjusted the decree in Homjibhai's suit, and that, even if there was no fraud, he, as administrator of P's estate, ought to have recovered back the money realized by the sale, instead of accepting a compromise. On appeal, the order of the Subordinate Judge was reversed by the District Judge. On appeal to the High Court,—Held, confirming the order of the District Judge that H was not personally liable. Under s. 234 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), a representative of a deceased judgment-debtor, who has failed purposely or negligently to recover some debt due to the estate of the deceased, or some property belonging to it, is not liable in the same way as for property of the deceased which has come to his hands. In that section, property is not defined as identical with assets, and so to include mere rights of action. Nor is it provided that in an execution-proceeding the representative shall be made answerable as well for what with diligence on his part would have come to his hands as what actually has come to his hands. It may well be that, while the Legislature intended to bring the representative under the control of a summary inquiry where he had actually received property, it did not intend to make him answerable in other cases except through the medium of a suit for administration or other regular action. In a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover the value of the unthreshed rice from the defendants, both the lower Courts dismissed the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the theft was not the immediate or probable result of the attachment, and that the conduct of the defendants had not in any way conduced to the loss of the rice. Held by the High Court, reversing the decrees of the lower Courts, that the defendants were liable. —Part satisfaction certified to the Court—Application for execution of full amount of decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) s 231 244 253—On an application for execution for the full amount due under a decree by some of several joint decree holders the judgment debtor objected to execution being granted for the full amount of the decree on the ground that he had already paid off a large portion of the money due under the decree to B, one of the joint decree holders. decree, and before the granting of an application for review of judgment, to order a stay of execution of the decree. No such power exists under the Code. On the 29th July 1886, an application was made by a party against whom the High Court, on second appeal, had passed a decree, dated the 18th March 1886, for review of judgment. On the 28th August, the applicant made a further application that execution of the decree might be stayed pending the determination of the application for review, and an order was passed ex-parte granting this application. Subsequently, the opposite party applied under s. 623 of the Civil Procedure Code for a review of the ex-parte order on the grounds (i) that the Court had no jurisdiction to make it; and (ii) that the application of the 29th July was beyond time, and therefore there could be no review of judgment, and no order for stay of execution pending such review. Held that the decree of 18th March being final and unappealable, and no application for review of judgment having been granted within the meaning of s. 630 of the Code, the application for stay of execution did not fall within s. 545 or s. 546, nor did s. 647 apply to it, nor any other provision of the Code. *AMIR HASAN v. The plaintiff instituted a suit against defendant for recovery of money and other reliefs, which was ultimately dismissed in appeal by the High Court, and he was ordered to pay defendant Rs. 1,000 as cost of the litigation. Plaintiff then brought this suit against defendant in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Farukhabad, and, while it was pending, defendant applied to the Court to execute his decree for costs. Plaintiff then applied for stay of the execution, and his application was refused by the first Court, but granted by the District Court. 491. ——— Modification or cancellation of security-bond—Civil Procedure Code, s. 338.—K sued R for a sum of money due on promissory notes, and obtained a decree in the Judge's Court. R appealed to the High Court, and prayed that execution might be stayed till the appeal was disposed of. The Court, under the provisions of s. 338, Code of Civil Procedure, ordered that execution might be stayed, provided good and sufficient security were given. Accordingly A appeared before the Judge, and executed a security-bond binding himself, in the event of the appeal being dismissed, to liquidate the debt. The appeal was heard by a Division Bench, and, the Judges differing, the opinion of the senior Judge prevailed under s. 36 of the Letters Patent, and the appeal was decreed. From this judgment an appeal was preferred under s. 15 to a Full Bench. After the opinion of the Division Bench was pronounced, A applied to the Judge for the return of his security-bond; but his application was refused pending the final decree of the High Court in the matter. He then moved the High Court for the cancellation or return of the bond. Held that, as the High Court had authority under s. 338, Act VIII of 1859, to make an order calling for security, it had authority at any time to modify or cancel such order, or to direct the restoration of the security when no longer required, and that in carrying out the Court's order to take security and enquire into its validity, the Judge was acting, not judicially, but ministerially. Held also that, as the decree of the Judge had been reversed by the Bench who tried the appeal, there was no decree of the Judge to execute, and the Judge's order refusing to return the security-bond was passed without jurisdiction, and was therefore null and void. On the reversal of the decree, the liability of the surety ceased, and the security-bond became a dead letter. AMEER ALI v. KASSIM ALI KHAN . . . . . 13 W. R., 403

The bond would not bind the decree-holder to conform to a mere direction as to the manner in which the decree was to be executed when that direction came too late, but would need to be construed equitably, and the other party, if still a debtor to the decree-holder, would not be entitled to recover anything unless it were shown that he had sustained damage. SHURYUTOOLLAH MIRDHA v. 508. ————— Order of sale—Application for execution struck off—Application for restoration—Finality of order.—A decree for money was passed on the 19th March 1865. The first application for its execution, made after Act X of 1877 came into force, was dated the 16th December 1878. On this application an order was made by the Court executing the decree (Munsif) for the sale of certain property belonging to the judgment-debtor. The latter objected to the execution of the decree on the ground of limitation, and the decree-holders filed an answer to the objection. On the 14th July 1879, the case was struck off, because the decree-holder had not deposited certain process-fees, without the disposal of the objection. On the 1st October 1879, the decree-holders again applied for the sale of the property, and it was ordered to be sold. On the 17th February, the judgment-debtor presented a petition repeating the objection, which, on the 13th March 1880, the Munsif entertained and disallowed. This order was affirmed in appeal by the District Judge, and again by the High Court. Meanwhile, the Munsif had struck off the case from the file of execution cases pending in his Court on the ground that the records had been despatched to the Appellate Court. On the 18th September 1882, the decree-holder again applied for execution of the decree, praying that "the suit might be restored to its number, and that the judgment-debt might be caused to be realized by attachment and sale of the judgment-debtor's property specified in the former schedule." Held that the decree-holder was entitled to execution of the decree, and that he could get it under the application which was made on the 1st October 1879, inasmuch as the matter was made res judicata by the decree of the High Court in appeal, and it must be taken that that decree was correctly passed, and that the order for sale passed upon it was properly made, and that the sale ought to have taken place. Held also that the proper application for the decree-holder to have made in September 1882 was that the case might be restored to the Munsif, and that the present application might be so dealt with as to effect the same result, because the prayer contained therein referred to the number of the proceedings of October 1879 and to the

in the Supreme Court against S C and others as representatives of D, and obtained a decree for R2,00,000. Pending this litigation, S C died, leaving six sons, J, M, H, P, C, and S M, and a will made before the birth of S M, by which he left all his property to his sons other than S M. On the death of S C, J, as one of the executors of his will, compromised B's suit, so far as it related to the estate of S C, for R80,000, and afterwards, in the same capacity, sued the representatives of S to recover that amount and the costs in the suit brought by B, and obtained a decree for R1,70,000. In the meantime H died, leaving the plaintiffs, his sons and heirs, and his brothers J and M, his executors. J renounced the executorship. M, on the 3rd June 1854, as executor of H executed a deed of assignment, by which he conveyed to J and S M, for R5,000, the interest of the plaintiffs in the decree obtained by J, and subsequently, at a sale of property belonging to the representatives of S in execution of the decree, J himself became the purchaser. In 1857, in an administration suit which had been brought by the plaintiffs to compel M to account for the assets received by him from the estate of H, the master was directed to take an account, which was accordingly done. In a suit brought by the plaintiffs, the sons of H, against J M and S M to set aside the deed of 23rd June 1854,—Held that, notwithstanding the renunciation of executorship by J, he stood in a fiduciary relation to the plaintiffs, and the assignment, being found to have been made for an inadequate consideration, was ordered to be set aside on the plaintiffs paying the purchaser J the amount of the purchase-money. By a third instrument bearing the same date as the other two, they as such executors aforesaid constituted the manager of the bank for the time being their true and lawful attorney for them, and in their names and as their act and deed to sell such real estate and to do all acts necessary for effecting the premises. Default having been made in payment of the moneys by an instrument in writing which recited the instruments already mentioned, the manager of the bank for the time being, described as such, in the exercise of the power of sale and for the purpose of reimbursing to the bank the moneys, granted and conveyed to B such real estate and all the estate and interest therein of the executors freed from the mortgage above recited, and the manager for the executors executed the usual covenants for title and further assurance. B, having been resisted in obtaining possession of such real estate under such conveyance by a legatee of the testator, sued the legatee and the executors for a declaration of right to, and for possession of, such real estate in virtue of such conveyance. The legatee contended that the executors had no authority to confer a power of sale. Held (STUART, C.J., dissenting) that the executors had such authority under s. 269 of the Succession Act, and that the conveyance was accordingly valid and operated to transfer the property to B. *SEALE v. By his will he appointed D his executor, and named the defendant his residuary legatee. At the time of his death, H K was indebted to M in a large amount, for which M held mortgages on his property. On the 5th March 1873, M's debt amounted to Rs1,33,631, and it was agreed between M and D as executor that the mortgaged property (estimated at one lakh in value) should be made over to M absolutely in part payment, and that D should become personally liable to her for the balance of Rs33,631 with interest at 9 per cent. payable within twelve months. In consideration thereof, M was to release D as executor and the defendant from liability for the sum of Rs1,33,631. An indenture carrying out this agreement was executed on the same day, and D gave a bond making himself personally liable to M for Rs33,631. Shortly afterwards a new arrangement was made. M agreed to abandon Rs10,631 of the Rs33,631 due under the bond and to accept Rs23,000 payable in yearly instalments of Rs3,000 in satisfaction of her whole claim. In pursuance of this agreement, D, as executor, paid the first instalment, J paid the second instalment, D having made over the estate of H K to the Administrator General under the provisions of Act II of 1874. M died in October 1874, and the plaintiff as her executrix sued the defendant for the instalments due in 1876, 1877, and 1878. Held that, the estate of H K having been released by M by the deed executed on the 5th March 1873, it was not competent for D as executor by a new contract to charge it with any liability in respect of the amount due to M. *Childs v. In order to pay off the said debt, the executors shall sell, mortgage, or pledge moveable or immovable properties of my estate or shall let out in part or in whole, or in any manner the immovable properties of my estate, and they shall pay off the said debt from the proceeds." 17. — Manager under Hindu will—Power of mortgage and borrowing money—R R D died possessed of certain property in Calcutta and left him surviving S D, widow of his son J C, deceased, and three granddaughters, upon whose marriages he directed H P, his executor, to expend Rs 600, and to pay his debts, etc., and further directed that, if there should not be money forthcoming for the purpose specified in the will, the property should be sold to make up the deficit. H P expended on the marriages much more than was limited by the will, and for this purpose mortgaged the property to T C and others, who were proceeding to foreclose when S D sued to have the mortgage-deed set aside as against the heir of R R D, which she claimed to be, through U S, deceased whom she had adopted under a direction in the will of her husband that she should adopt three sons in succession, a direction which H P was enjoined by R R D's will to see carried out. The mortgagees resisted her claim on the grounds that she had not adopted a second son, that the powers of sale not the same power over a testator's estate as an tator, that the general power of a manager under a will may be restricted by the will, that a manager under a will is bound to act according to the directions in the will, and that where an attorney or manager under a will has power to mortgage for specific purposes, it is the duty of the mortgagee to enquire into the circumstances under which, and the authority upon which the mortgage was effected. That when a will directs a certain sum to be expended for marriage purposes, the manager or executor had direction in a will to sell houses and invest the surplus proceeds in Government securities does not authorize the executor to borrow money to a high interest and amounts to a direction not to mortgage the houses, that when a plaintiff seeks to set aside a mortgage on the ground that the mortgagor had no power to mortgage, and that the mortgagees had acted fraudulently the Court can grant relief even if the fraud be not made out, the issue as to the mortgagor's power to mortgage being found in favour of the plaintiff. SREENUTTY DOSSETT v. In June 1895, the applicant, stating that he was one of the residuary legatees of T, applied for a citation to be issued to D directing him to bring in and prove the will of T. In reply, D submitted that there was no necessity to prove the will; that the estate was fully administered, and that he had no funds left in his hands out of which to pay the costs of probate. Held that the executor, D, must lodge the will in Court, and that, on the applicant paying half the estimated cost of obtaining probate (including probate duty), D should take out probate of the will. *DAYABHAI TAPIDAS v. Certain petitions said to emanate from the accused were received by Government charging the complainant with bribery and corruption. Government thereupon ordered Mr. Monteath, Collector and Magistrate of the district, to inquire into the matter. Mr. Monteath enforced the attendance of the accused by writing to the police, who brought the accused before him. In answer to questions put to him, the accused denied having sent any petition to Government, but stated that he had paid a bribe to the complainant to secure the acquittal of his son, who was then on his trial on a charge of theft before him. Mr. Monteath examined other witnesses, and reported the result of his inquiry to Government. Government permitted the Deputy Collector to prosecute the accused, and he accordingly lodged a complaint against the accused for defamation under s. 500 of the Penal Code (XLV of 1860) in having stated to Mr. Monteath, in the course of the inquiry, that he (the complainant) had accepted a bribe from him. The trying Magistrate was of opinion that the offence fell under s. 211 of the Penal Code. He at first framed charges both under ss. 211 and 500. But subsequently he struck out the charge of defamation under s. 500, and convicted the accused under s. 211 of making a false charge. On appeal, the Joint Sessions Judge was of opinion that the charge under s. 211 could not be maintained, as the accused had not made any "false charge" to a Court or officer having jurisdiction to investigate it. As regards the charge of defamation, he was of opinion that the fact of bribery was not proved. But he held that in making the statement to Mr. Monteath the accused had acted in good faith, and that his case fell under excep. 8 to s. 499 of the Penal Code. He therefore reversed the conviction under s. 211, and acquitted the accused of defamation under s. 500 of the Code.
